TOWN PROMOTION NO. 2

"Let us say that Smith," said the Board of Trade man quoted in the previous article, "is one of your townspeople. He is a buoyant fellow, full of appreciation of the present advantages of your town, and its possibilities for growth. He goes off some day to spend a week end with his wife's relations, and incidentally gets to talking about your town. He tells what a good place it is to live and do business in."

"A few months after it appears that some young men in the town visited by Smith, is contemplating the starting of a new industry. He has a little capital, but finds his own home people indifferent to him. The words of your friend Smith had been heard by him. It strikes him that your place might be an excellent town to get a start in. He writes to Smith, who invites the young man to his home, and later introduces him to the business men about town. He gets the glad hand, and inside a few months your town has a new industry.

Trade man, "that in the majority of cases, new industries locate in somewhat that way. Some are founded in response to circulars and appeals sent out by Boards of Trade. The majority come because a town has acquired a reputation for hustling, and for business and residence advantages.

Of course Smith might go visiting for a hundred week ends, talk his relatives blind about the advantages of his town, and never interest a soul to think of moving there. Yet the hundred and first time he might strike some one who was thinking of entering some new venture, and might bring something back to his home community.

"If 100 men in any town," concluded the speaker, "would make it their practice on all possible occasions to say a word tactfully—never forcing the subject—to people from other towns as to the advantages of their home place, in time this would create quite a widespread reputation. Some of the people that heard about the town would be interested to make further inquiries. A few of them would be likely to move in and bring some good business with them."

A town grows and is built up by its reputation, was the conclusion. To secure that reputation, the citizens of a town must do all they can to spread information about its advantages. From a thousand chance seeds of information and helpfulness, a few will bear fruit. It may seem luck and chance, but it is really the result of a community habit of push and expansion and search for new opportunity.

MAY DAY

On the first day of May in the old fashioned country town, the children used to expect a half holiday. It was quite customary for the teacher to take the youngsters to walk, for gathering of flowers, and observation of birds, trees and vegetation.

The twentieth century youngster is too sophisticated for such simple joys. The boys are out on the back lot playing ball and whooping like Indians. The small girls are designing new 1915 style gowns for their dolls, while the big girls are having formal teas.

In the Old World May day was a time of popular merry making. For a young woman to be chosen Queen of the May, an election based mostly on her beauty of feature, was a greater triumph than anything that could be bought with money. Light hearted revellers gathered around the May-pole, and the lads and lassies footed it on the village green.

Today in Europe, were it not for the war, May day would bring the usual Socialistic and trade union manifestations. The spirit of festival seems to have gone out of the day, which has become an expression of discontent and often of hostile class feeling.

In this country May day has no longer any particular festival character. In many cities it is the annual moving day. House-keepers, discontented with their surroundings, pack their lares and penates on the moving van, and sally forth in discomfort and toil after more commodious mansions, or at least apartments for the rent of which they can get trusted.

Thus the first day of May, once a pastoral kind of an occasion, seems to stand today mostly for unrest. As the sap rises in the trees at the spring time, so some kind of human sap seems to stir the heart, creating new longings for the untried and the unpossessed. Perhaps the most throughly sensible way to celebrate it, where possible, is to quit work and go to the ball game.

IN MEMORIAM

In sad, but loving remembrance of my dear father, Wm. Thomas Lippy, who departed this life seven years ago today, April 28, 1908.

Oh, may I meet my father,
Where friends no more shall weep,
For those who die in Jesus,
Their death is only sleep.

By his daughter,
Mrs. Geo. C. Barber.

IN MEMORIAM

In sad, but loving remembrance of my dear mother, Mary S. Hook, who departed this life four years ago today, April 29, 1911.

Thy hands are cold, thy heart is still,
Our dream of bliss is o'er,
And now, upon this dreary earth,
She will cheer our hearts no more.

Oh, may we tread the sacred road,
Our dear and loving mother trod,
Wage to the end the glorious strife,
And win like her, the crown of life.

By her loving daughter,
M. E. Easton.

IN MEMORIAM

In sad, but loving remembrance of my dear husband, John W. Ogg, who departed this life April the 26th, 1910.

There is a grief that cannot find comfort,
And wounds that cannot be healed,
And the sorrow too deep in the human heart,
That cannot be revealed.

'Tis not the tears at the moment shed,
When the cold earth has just been thrown o'er him,
That tells how beloved is the one who is dead,
Or how deep in our hearts we deplore him.

'Tis the tears in many a long day wept,
'Tis life's whole pathway shaded,
'Tis the one remembrance fondly kept,
When all lighter griefs have faded.

Sleep on dear husband, and sweetly rest,
I needed you, but God knew best,
God's will be done, He doeth well,
But how I miss you, no tongue can tell.

By his loving wife.

IN MEMORIAM

In sad, but loving remembrance of my dear wife and our mother, Sarah A. Cecil, who departed this life one year ago today, April 26th, 1914.

Thou art gone.
Thou art gone to a land more fair,
Thy glorified spirit hath passed on before,
Thou hast crossed the dark lake to a brighter shore,
Awaiting me there.

Thou art gone.
Thou art gone to a land more fair,
And when we have passed through the valley of life,
Are freed from its sorrows, its care and its strife,
I'll meet thee there.

By her loving husband,
Rev. Geo. W. Cecil.

One mournful year hath vanished,
Think we while the tear drops start,
But the memory of our dear mother
Still is fresh within our hearts.

Oh, the misery of that dreary night,
When we stood around her bed,
'Till death stole upon her softly
And we knew her soul had fled.

Ah, since then our lives are saddened,
Since that day our hopes are slain,
But her voice seems softly saying
"Courage—we shall meet again."

Farewell, Mother, may your slumber
Be as gentle as your love,
And when God shall call us home,
May we meet in Heaven above.

By her children.

In the graveyard softly sleeping,
Where the flowers gently wave,
Lies the one we loved so dearly,
In her lonely, silent grave.

By her grandchildren.
