My dear Sally

I have been hoping to find a time when I could be fresh enough to give you a satisfactory letter but that does not come! I am afraid that Father may have written to you that I want to sell the Marietta first bonds that I hold, and for fear he has, I write immediately to say that I am not anxious about it at all. I wrote to him to ask what Uncle thought about it, because we feared as it was changing hands so much, that we feared there was some trouble brewing there. I only want the money taken care of, and would rather you and Israel would do just as you to open one here at Galesville. You know it is one of my bright day dreams, that you should unite with Harry and have one here! But I fear it will never be accomplished. With fondest love in which the family would join me but they are all asleep.

Believe me ever
Your loving sister
