A CAUTION TO THE SMALL INVESTOR

The collapse of several important railroad systems in the United States should be a lesson to people with small fortunes to invest. There is many a case today where the only security of a little home has been the regular dividend turning up every three months. When that cheerful messenger of comfort is turned into its ominous opposite, an assessment on stock, the person who suffers learns a life long lesson. But many others of the same type of people keep on putting money into equally hazardous enterprises.

Like the people who are called "land poor," their property may be so blanketed by mortgages and debts that a lot of money must be collected and laid out if the property is ever to be put on a paying basis.

When a corporation is distributing securities over a wide area to the general public, it would promote sound finance and confidence in the company, if it would issue bonds and stocks in somewhere nearly equal proportions. Something in the neighborhood of a half of the property ought to be represented by bonds which the stockholders agree to pay before receiving anything for their property. Then the rest of the capitalization can be issued in stock, which may be taken up properly only by people of some wealth or experience in finance, and who can afford to lose if the property goes wrong.

There is always a tendency to issue too large a part of capitalization in the form of bonds. Realizing that the public regards bonds as safer than stock, many companies get around this difficulty by issuing the great bulk of their capital in the form of bonds, and with only a small quantity of stock.

You can not make a security safe merely by calling it a bond. The cautious investor should carefully inquire whether the proportion of bonds to the value of the remaining property is abnormal and topheavy.

WOMEN AS DRIVERS OF AUTOMOBILES

It is being remarked in many places this spring, that a largely increased number of women are driving automobiles. In many cases one sees the woman of the house operating the machine, while the man is the passenger. Cautious persons have sometimes said that women could not be relied on to keep their heads in sudden emergencies. Yet the quick intuition that women are traditionally supposed to possess should be a valuable gift in a mix-up.

The woman driver is a natural outgrowth of an athletic age. The girl who plays lawn tennis and golf, and who bowls or swims, is not going to remain content with jouncing up and down in the back seat of an automobile. She may not know as much about tools as did her mother, who was more apt to have operated at least a sewing machine and could perform handy jobs of repairs about the house. But for that matter the average man is helpless on any job of tinkering. According to tradition women are supposed to be more polite than men. If they live up to their reputation, they will be popular on the road, where courtesy is far from being universal.

BLUE RIDGE COLLEGE

On last Friday evening the members of the two literary societies gave their annual joint program. It was considered the best literary program of the year, because of the unusual amount of literary ability and efficiency which it displayed. Because of the lecture given in town on the same evening, there was not so large a crowd present but all those who heard it, enjoyed it.
