The German Kaiser and his consort went to Poland a week ago to make a triumphal entry in to Warsaw, but returned to Berlin without accomplishing that purpose. The Russians surprised them by holding on to the city longer than was anticipated. They retired from it yesterday, and it is now occupied by the enemy. It is doubtful whether it will be of supreme advantage to the German cause, after all, and may, in the end, be more hurtful than advantageous. The Russians have been fighting stubbornly and without panic, and, retiring will be nearer their base of supplies. The Germans may be wise enough to stop their advance into Russian territory at Warsaw, and they probably will only be able to hold their advanced position on their long battle line by keeping up their force to its maximum.

In Flanders and France the usual fighting has occurred, without material change in the situation. Seesawing back and forth for a few yards seems about all that either side has accomplished. Why the French and Allies have not made greater progress while the German lines have been depleted by the Polish campaign, civilians cannot well understand.

The Italians continue their operations in the Gorz territory and have gained apparent advantages over the Austrians, but have not yet been able to capture Gorizia.

The Allies claim to have captured an important position in Gallipolis on the Dardannelles, but are making slow progress in opening the way to Constantinople.

It reported that Bulgaria is contemplating entering the war on the side of the Teutons, and that if she shall do so, Greece will fight for the Russians and Serbs.

German submarines continue to sink British ships.

WARSAW HAS FALLEN

Friday, August 5.—At no time can it be told what a day may bring forth, this is particularly true in relation to the war in Europe. Yesterday it appeared that several days must elapse before the Teutons could enter Warsaw. Today it is announced that the city has fallen, that the Russians are retiring and the enemy pressing on after them. Details are, of course, unattainable. Only the future can reveal the ultimate consequences of the German triumph. It may hasten peace, or prolong the war. Nobody can tell which.

Fighting elsewhere yesterday was without other important result than the slaughter of more men.

CHAUTAUQUA TICKETS

IS YOUR NAME ON THE LIST?

If it is not, phone 74-f at once and put it there

We mean the list of those who have ordered tickets for the Chautauqua which opens Friday, August 27, 1915. 500 tickets have been ordered and 200 more must be. That means that many names that should appear in the list of orders are not there. The Chautauqua has demonstrated its worth and its popularity and you will doubtless subscribe for tickets when solicited to do so. But why wait for the Committee's solicitation? Why not encourage and help the Committee by turning in your order NOW. Call up Mrs. H. Scott Roop, Chairman of the Ticket - Selling Committee, phone 74-f.

Those who have already subscribed for tickets should call for them at the Westminster Deposit and Trust Company between the hours of 9 a. m. and 3 p. m., as soon after August 10th as possible.

NOT A SERMON, BUT AN ARGUMENT

Some students of the Scriptures are disturbed because they find differeces in the language employed by the inspired writers in their descriptions of the same events. The several accounts of the resurrection of Jesus, by the Evangelists, for instance, present difficulties well nigh insurmountable to some minds, in respect to these differences in phraseology and in the incidents described, which seem contradictory; and some theologians have endeavored to harmonize them, but apparently without success. Nor is there need that this should be done. Of the four evangelists who record the narrative, St. John is probably the only one of them who went to the sepulchre after Mary Magdalene reported the resurrection and declared that she had seen the Lord. The other three relate the incidents of the great event as they were reported to them, and even St. John was only personally cognizant of a portion of the narrative as he recorded it.

Mary had been irresistibly drawn to the spot where she supposed Jesus lay in the last long sleep of death, and she was apparently alone when she saw the stone was rolled away from the entrance to the sepulchre, and supposed that the body of Jesus had been taken away by the Roman authorities. In her distress she ran quickly and told Peter and John what she had seen, and they hastened to the sepulchre. She also returned and it was then that Jesus accosted her and she did not recognize him until he called her name, had cautioned her against touching him and directed her to go and tell his brethren of his impending ascension.

St. Matthew and St. Mark both state that Mary Magdalene and Mary the mother of James, the less, were the first who encountered Jesus, and St. Mark adds the name of Salome. St. Luke names the two Marys and Joanna and other women. He names Peter only as the disciple who ran to the sepulchre, tells nothing about the appearance of an angel to Peter, but relates how two men in shining garments appeared to the women and told them of the resurrection.

St. Mark says the women entered the sepulchre and saw a young man clothed in a long white garment, who told them of the resurrection and directed them to go and tell his disciples and Peter.

St. Matthew specifically describes this young man as the angel of the Lord, and says his countenance was like lightning and his raiment white as snow. He gave the two Mary's the message of the resurrection and bade them to "go quickly and tell his disciples."

He would have a fruitless and impossible task, who should undertake to make these varying accounts of the Resurrection of Our Lord harmonize, or agree, in exact language. For each gives only a part of the narrative, and that, in large measure, as it was variously related to him by the women, or perhaps by some one to whom it was told by them. The salient fact of the narrative does not lie in the language in which it was told by the different evangelists. In that they are in perfect accord and agreement. Three words sum up the whole matter: "Christ is Risen." That is the inspired message to the children of men. It is the fact that is inspired and the evangelists were inspired to tell it in their own language. There is no disagreement between them touching the resurrection. Everyone of them knew personally of that. At the time of its occurrence it was told to them and, without doubt, they received the knowledge by inspiration also. But they beheld him, with their own eyes, before his ascension. Their testimony is strengthened, not weakened, by the variation of language in their narratives. If the language of all four was identical, it would raise a strong presumption of collusion. If any four witnesses in an earthly court should testify, in a given case, in exactly the same language, they would be considered guilty of an agreement to commit perjury. No believer in Divine inspiration, therefore, need be disturbed by the apparent variation in the narratives of the resurrection by the evangelists. The fact is too strongly proved, even upon mere human judgment and knowledge, and it has been attested by the personal experience of believers all down through the renturies sinse that first Easter morning.

The New Testament description of the resurrection is not the only instance of apparent disagreement in the variation of an occurrence told in its pages. The story of the storm on the Sea of Galilee, when the disciples, in alarm and fear of death, aroused the Saviour from slumber and appealed to his protection; and the miracle of giving sight to blind Bartimaeous, are cases in point. The essence of each of these miracles is that the storm on Galilee was stilled by the word of the Divine Master, who also, by a word, gave sight to the blind beggar at Jericho. The same principle obtains in the relation of these events. The heart of each one of them is the fact of its occurrence. The evangelists all testify in their own way, that Christ was risen from the dead. Those of them who recorded the stories of the storm on Gallilee and the opening of the ewes of Bartimaeus, did not raise the slightest question of doubt about the occurrence of these miracles. That they were performed is so clearly stated that none can find just ground to question their authenticity. It matters little that the narrators do not tell of them in the same identical language. That they occurred is the essence of each, and the assurance they give that Jesus Christ is the Son of God and the Redeemer of the world, is the truth that concerns the children of men.
