CHOOSING A GOOD STALLION

Progressive Farmer Confronted With Difficult Problem—Feet and Legs Are Essentials.

(By J. S. MONTGOMERY, Minnesota Experiment Station.)

In the spring season the progressive farmer who keeps brood mares is confronted with the problem of choosing a stallion to which to breed. In many cases it is merely a question of eliminating the worst, as there are many communities that are not supplied with a good stallion. In many other cases, however, the saving of five dollars on a service fee plays an all too important part. A saving of five dollars on a service fee often means a loss of $100 or more when the colt is two years old.

When looking at a stallion it is well to ask yourself, "How much would he be worth as a gelding? If his colts are like him, will they be good market geldings? How much improvement will he make when bred to the average farm mares?" The answer to these questions will decide whether the horse is a suitable sire or not. In answering them it should be kept in mind that good feet and legs are the first essential of a marketable horse. If the stallion does not have them he cannot be expected to produce them in his offspring.

HOW THE SWINE MAKE GAINS

Importance of Pushing Hogs From Start Is Emphasized by Data Gathered at Wisconsin.

Young animals make more pounds of gain from their food than when older. Dean Henry of Wisconsin gathered a lot of data on this and found that 38-pound pigs required 239 pounds of feed to make 100 pounds of gain, 78-pound pigs required 400 pounds of feed, 128-pound pigs 437 pounds of feed, 174-pound pigs 482 pounds, 226-pound pigs 498 pounds, 271-pound pigs 511 pounds and for the 330-pound hogs it took 535 pounds of food to make the 100 pounds of gain, or nearly twice as much as for the 38-pound pigs.

This emphasizes the importance of pushing the hogs from the start in order to make the most economical gains.

It has been found at the North Dakota experiment station that April pigs can be made to weigh 200 to 250 pounds by November 1.

RAISING MOTHERLESS LAMBS

Common Practice to Use Cow's Milk, Feeding From Bottle With Suitable Rubber Nipple.

Motherless lambs can be and commonly are, raised on cow's milk, fed from a bottle with rubber nipple—not from a pail, as are calves. Feed them about half a pint of milk or perhaps a little less, three times a day at first, increasing gradually. Warm the milk to a blood heat before feeding.

After a little time they can get some good from grass and skim milk can be substituted for whole milk.

Babies are sometimes raised on condensed milk and probably it could be used instead of fresh milk for lambs, but from the standpoint of both expense and results fresh milk is likely to give better satisfaction.

Keep Sheep Pen Level.

Keep the pen level. Sheep get cast easily, and a hollow in the pen may be fatal to your best ewe.

A Chance Investment

By Walter Joseph Delaney

(Copyright, 1915, by W. G. Chapman.)

"I do not wish you to become alarmed or change your plans," wrote the father of Eleanor Gwynne to his only daughter, two thousand miles away from home. "I tell you of the possible trouble in my business only because you might hear of it through other sources. I may be able to weather through. If not, it means our living on a more moderate scale, that is all. You still have the income from your mother's estate, so we cannot exactly starve."

"Poor, dear papa! and always thinking of my comfort and happiness!" mused Eleanor with some agitation. "Of course I shall not remain here—with him alone with his trouble. No, there is a stage Monday and it will see me homeward bound."

How different this, her second visit from the first she had made to the pine-laden breezes and exquisite solitude of an Arizona health resort! The year previous at exactly this same season of the year she and her father had spent three weeks together at this romantic spot. Only, then everything was prospering, there were no cares of business to annoy. Eleanor folded the letter, when she noticed some additional lines, comprising a postscript, on the reverse side of the sheet.

"By the way," it ran, "it is a forlorn hope, but I mention it—that scamp, Warren Brill! I don't know if you remember him, but he is that likely looking young fellow who acted as our guide for a time. I never told you, but I was so taken with his manliness and energy that I was induced by him to trust him with five thousand dollars to buy a mine. He asked a year in which to develop it and make us both rich. I have never heard from him since, but a few months ago I wrote to some people at Crofutt Pass about him. They could tell me nothing about Brill, but said that the mine he purchased, or pretended to purchase, was abandoned because it was flooded and absolutely worthless. It is a vain quest, I imagine, but you might make some inquiries and let me know the result.

The Squaw Produced a Keen-Bladed Knife.

That five thousand dollars would pretty nearly mean my business salvation just now."

There was a certain animation in the eyes of the pretty girl as she read these lines. These were not needed to at once invoke a remembrance of the person they named. Eleanor retained a vivid memory of the bright, gentlemanly young fellow who had been their companion for nearly a week. He was musical, educated, in harmony with their ideas of courtesy and refinement and had left a distinctly pleasing impression on the mind of Eleanor.

She was astounded at the implication of dishonesty made by her father. She had regarded Brill as the soul of honor. More than once in gay frivolous social circles she had compared her flippant admirers with this model young westerner, and not to his disadvantage.

That evening Eleanor made inquiries at a tourist hotel as to Brill. He was remembered, but had dropped out of sight months since, she was informed.

"There was a great friend of his named Savage," advised the landlady. "I think he is a clerk or something at the mail station."

There Eleanor went the next morning. It was to locate this Savage, a young man, a cripple, whose eyes brightened and whose face glowed at the mention of a name evidently cherished.

"Mr. Brill is across the range somewhere near Inca," he said, and then he burst forth into extravagant eulogies concerning the man he designated as his best friend. It appeared that Brill had saved his life in a great freshet disaster and had secured him his present position.

The landlady, when Eleanor began to make inquiries regarding the route over the range, seriously advised her not to make the journey alone.

"You should not attempt it, unprotected," she warned Eleanor. "The country is wild and infested with vicious half-breeds and even outlaws," but Eleanor was fearless and willful. She equipped herself in stanch walking trim, and noontide saw her passing down a lonely mountain gully and recognizing marks in the landscape described to her which indicated that she was nearing Crofutt pass. Suddenly, turning past a dense thicket, she recoiled with a start as a tawny-skinned woman darted directly in front of her.

The stranger, a half-breed squaw, was slovenly, half-intoxicated and vicious looking. Her eyes glowed as she made out the small netted handbag suspended from the belt that Eleanor wore. She thrust out her hand, seized it and tore it loose. Eleanor put out a detaining hand, for the bag contained some money and valuable jewelry.

The squaw produced a keen-bladed knife and showed her teeth. Then she quickly uncoiled a stort lariat from her waist. Eleanor read her purpose, to bind her hand and foot and leave her helpless while she fled safely with her spoils.

Eleanor sought to defend herself. She stooped suddenly, seized a heavy stick lying in the path, swung it around and swept her despoiler off her feet. With an angry snarl the squaw regained her feet, but Eleanor fled precipitately. She fancied she heard a masculine voice shouting out after her, but she feared an accomplice of the squaw and terror lent fleetness to her actions.

Eleanor deviated from the gully, seeking shelter in rushing up a side path. At the top she paused breathless. A view of the spot where she had been robbed was now shut out from her view. Eleanor made out a cabin, its door open. She rushed through the aperture and sank to a chair in a rudely furnished room, nearly at the point of fainting.

Her eyes opened wide as, wandering about the room, they fell upon a picture on a stand. It was her own. Near to it was a tiny vase and in this, as if replaced fresh every morning was a mountain daisy, her favorite flower.

She recalled having her picture taken the year before in this very district by a traveling photographer Was this one printed from the same negative? Lost in anger, half-guessing the truth, she started up as a stalwart form crossed the threshold. It was "that scamp," Warren Brill!

He greeted her with manifest repression and respect. She wondered if Fate was in all this, as he told of witnessing the robbery, of recovering the booty from the squaw.

"I found this on the ground," he explained, and he handed Eleanor with the handbag the letter she had received from her father the day previous. There was a queer twinkle in his eye. She flushed deeply.

"It is just a year lacking three days since your father loaned me the money to purchase the old mine, Miss Wynne," he said. "It turned out a heartless swindle, but my defeat urged me up to new efforts to make amends to my generous backer. I struck a new rich prospect. See," and he exhibited receipts from the branch mint for over fifty thousand dollars.

Brill saw her safely back to town. He saw her, too, every day after that during her stay. Then, the last evening but one, he told his love.

"Dear papa," spoke Eleanor, homereturned a week later, after their greetings were over, "you asked me to find 'that scamp,' Warren Brill, for you."

"Yes, Eleanor."

"Well, I have brought him with me to explain all about his terrible duplicity!"

And Eleanor went into the hallway and beckoned to Warren Brill, and led into the presence of her amazed sire her future husband.

All the Day's Work.

In a town of Maryland one Bill Morton appeared before the postmaster one morning and the following colloquy occurred:

"Morning, Mr. Postmaster."

"Morning, Bill."

"Has Tom Moore been in for his mail yet?"

"No."

Will you be here when he comes?"

"I guess so."

"Well, when he comes in will you tell him that on his way from the cheese factory I wish he'd stop and get that pig of Herman Stutz's and take it down to Henry Parker's, and tell Henry I said he could have it for the single harness even up, if he'll fix that bridle and throw in them russet lines instead of the old black ones; and if he won't trade, tell Tom to bring the pig down to my place and put it in the extra pen, and be sure and shut that door to the hen house, or all the chickens will get out. Sure there ain't no mail? Morning, Mr. Postmaster."

"Morning, Bill."

He Didn't Know.

"Well, how are you today?" asked the doctor.

"I don't feel a bit better, doctor," said the patient.

"Did you take the medicine as I directed?"

"What medicine?"

"Why, that prescription I gave you yesterday. Didn't you get it filled?"

"You mean that piece of paper you gave me when I went out?"

"Yes. That was a prescription."

"On I thought it was a receipt for the two dollars."

THE WAR IN EUROPE

ALLIES WIN VICTORY IN WEST WAR ZONE

BREAK THE FIRST GERMAN DEFENCE LINE

CAPTURE 25,000 OR MORE PRISONERS

GERMAN REINFORCEMENTS HURRIED FROM THE RUSSIAN FRONT

RUSSIANS PUSH GEN. MACKINSON BACK

COSSACKS CUT GERMAN COMMUNICATIONS

BULGARIA WILL PROBABLY REMAIN NEUTRAL

The important event of the week in the European war was a victory of magnitude by the Allies over the Germans in the west war zone. Great guns battered down the German defences and destroyed the wire entanglements. Then the Allies' troops rushed to the fray and by bayonet charges drove their enemies from their first line of defence and captured at least 25,000 prisoners. It was a brilliant victory and has been followed by fierce fighting, in which the Germans, reinforced by troops from the armies in front of the Russians have been making desperate efforts to regain the lost ground. But the Allies have not only defeated these efforts, but, according to Paris reports, have made some additional gains. The drive, however, has evidently been halted and Berlin, while acknowledging the disaster to the German arms, declares that the Allied advance has been stayed and pushed back. The French report however, seems reliable and names Hill 140, east of Verney, a position of importance, as a point just reached by their foward offensive. The Kaiser has left the Russian front and is now with his forces in France.

Berlin reports that, notwitstanding the withdrawal of troops from the armies operating against the Russians, Gen. von Hindenberg is still pushing the Russian campaign.

Military operations elsewhere than above reported appear to be of minor importance.

If true, a report that Bulgaria has determined to remain neutral, is important. The Bulgarian premier, who favored the Germans, has been retired, with his cabinet, and a premier and cabinet favorable to neutrality have succeeded them. Doubtless the success of the Allies in France has had its effect in changing the Bulgarian attitude.

The Russians operating against the army of the German General Mackinsen, claim to have been meeting with success. The operations of the Cossacks, too, have been seriously annoying the armies of von Hindenburg, by cutting his communications temporarily destroying railroad tracks and, in one or two instances destroying supply trains. The German cavalry is no match for the Cossacks, who are probably the greatest and fiercest horsemen in the world.

A fierce battle is raging on the Germans' second line of defence in the west war zone. The Germans have been heavily reinforced and are making a stubborn resistance, though the French are making slight gains. It is believed the operations in that locality will relieve the pressure of von Hindenberg on the Russians and prevent the apprehended drive on Serbia.
