THE WAR IN EUROPE

TEUTONS AND BULGARIANS JOINED

WAY TO CONSTANTINOPLE AND THE AEGEAN SEA OPENED

SERBIA STILL FIGHTING, BUT UNABLE TO RESIST THE ADVANCE

FRENCH FORCE HAS MET BULGARIANS AND DEFEATED THEM

ALLIES MAKING STRENUOUS EFFORTS TO INCREASE ARMIES BY WAY OF SALONIKA

GERMANS ACTIVE AGAINST RUSSIANS, BUT HELD IN CHECK, WHILE RUSSIANS CLAIM FURTHER SUCCESSES AGAINST AUSTRIANS

GERMANS REPULSED IN AN ATTACK UPON THE FRENCH

OTHER MATTERS OF INTEREST

Not many words need be used to sum up the war situation in Europe. Serbia is now the center of interest and the Teutons and Bulgarians operating against the Serbs have formed a junction which opens the way to Constantinople, and, according to a statement made public, to the Aegean sea. The meaning of that report is not very clear. Bulgaria has eighty miles of coast on that sea, but war ships of the Allies control the whole body of water. French troops, advancing from Salonika, have encountered and driven back a force of Bulgarians. Large bodies of the Allies are being hastened to and beyond Salonika to meet the united armies of Germany and Bulgaria, and Turkey will now be the land that will see much of the fighting. Rumors of peace movements are in circulation, but any prospect of a cessation of the great strife seems to be far distant.

The Austrians are claiming successes against the Italians, and have probably checked Italian movements; but no change of real importance has taken place along the Italian front.

The Germans are active in their campaign against Riga and Dvinsk, but the Russians are evidently about holding their own in those quarters. Russians are still operating successfully in Galicia, but nothing of much importance has transpired in that region during the week, though, altogether, the torch of war is flaming over much of the European Continent.

Berlin claims success in a fierce attack upon the French line at one point, but Paris reports that the attack was repulsed.

Several German spies have been shot in England and there is no abatement of the horrors of the dreadful conflict.

The long delayed note of protest to Great Britain, against unlawful interference with American shipping, has been transmitted to the British Government, which will probably long delay a reply that will also be altogether unsatisfactory.

The alleged German conspiracy to destroy ships sailing from American ports and to blow up munitions factories in this country, is being investigated by the agents of the government. But complications with Germany, growing out of it, it may be safely predicted, will be avoided if possible.

JUST GOVERNMENT LEAGUE

The Just Government League of Carroll County held its first meeting of the winter at the residence of Mrs. O. D. Gilbert, Tuesday, October 19th, and plans for the winter work were discussed. Although no meetings were held during the summer, the members have not been idle, and they have kept in touch with the State and National Leagues with which they co-operate.

Five dollars was voted to the State League for work in other parts of Maryland.

Mrs. S. K. Herr and Mrs. O. D. Gilbert were appointed delegates to the State Convention which was held on Thursday, October 21st, and 22nd, at Easton, as the guests of the Talbott County League. Both ladies report a most successful and interesting convention, and the earnestness and enthusiasm of the ladies of Talbott County where they have a very flour-

Miss Dorothy Elderdice was elected secretary in place of Mrs. Annette Whitmore Smith who has moved from Westminster. Resolutions of regret at the death of Miss Katharine Reed Lockwood, a valued member of the League, were passed, and the president was requested to express sympathy of the League to the members of her family.

The next meeting of the League will be held at the residence of Mrs. Carroll Albaugh on the third Tuesday in November at 7.30 P. M., when it is hoped to have a speaker from Baltimore.

Mrs. S. K. Herr and Mrs. O. D. Gilbert were elected at the State Convention as delegates to the National Convention which meets in Washington, D. C., in December, to represent Carroll County.

MORE OF THE DEMOCRATIC BLUNDERS

Washington, D. C. October 26—Another stupendous blunder has been added to the Democratic score.

The law to prohibit future trading in cotton, enacted last year, has been declared unconstitutional by a federal court.

A violation by Congress of one of the simplest rules of law making is the basis for the decision. The constitution directs that all revenue measures must originate in the House of Representatives. The cotton futures law originated in the Senate. By title it was "an act to tax dealing in cotton," etc. it has produced revenue.

A plainer case of legislative botching is hardly conceivable. The court said it could do nothing but pronounce the law void.

The decision unmercifully flays the Democratic Congress for its slovenly methods.

"This act falls into the class of measures void because of the unworkmanlike way in which Congress used the tools provided by the constitution," said the opinion of the court, "Congress did something in such a slovenly manner that (to be effective) it must be done over again.

"The constitution provides that all bills for revenue must originate in the House. It is not seen how this court can disregard information furnished by Congress itself."

A more humiliating fiasco than this Democratic experiment with the cotton industry can be scarcely imagined. For years there has been constant agitation on the subject. It culminated in a tremendous demand in the last Congress for legislation to regulate the cotton market. Dramatic eppeals came from scores of national law makers from cotton producing centers.

"Unless you enact this law," declared Representative Lever, of South Carolina, House sponsor for the bill, "our people will go on suffering an annual loss of one hundred millions of dollars."

Impassioned orators hailed the writing of the statute as the nation's salvation, and pictured its defeat as a "knife-thrust at the throbbing heart of the south." Yet in almost the same breath they voted for a bill the very title of which proclaimed its worthlessness.

The machinery of law making is not a mere plaything. It is a powerful instrument controlling national destinies. Public welfare damands that its operation should not be entrusted to those who over and over again have demonstrated their utter unfitness for the responsibility.

"Solomon's Judgment"

By ETTA BARRY BIGGS

(Copyright, 1915, by W. G. Chapman.)

Dr. Alvin Ross passed down the street greeted by pleasant words and faces, love for all humanity in his heart. Dr. Juneau Lysle on the other side of the thoroughfare, head down, a scowl on his handsome face, curtly nodded when addressed, hatred and suspicion in his heart.

"Don't speak, eh?" remarked an observant storekeeper to a passer-by. "Thought they were like brothers when they first came here."

"Business rivalry, I suppose," was the careless response. "You see, when they came here they sort of divided the town; Lysle took the west end, among the fashionables. Ross chose the larger but poorer section. I suppose a sort of professional jealousy has resulted. Anyhow, they're at daggers' points."

The speaker had the situation fifty per cent wrong. The two young physicians had been close chums at college. They had selected Blairsville as their future field of operations. Everything had been harmonious. It was by preference that Doctor Ross selected a field where the poor and lowly lived. For another reason he had little capital, while Lysle did have some. It would cost money to build up an aristocratic clientele and Lysle was best equipped to provide it.

Now it chanced that within a week after coming to the village Lysle met Vashti Merriam. She was a member of an exclusive family residing in a show country place a few miles from town. He was very much in love with her and Vashti seemed impressed. Twice Ross accompanied him in his calls. Then one evening the servant announced to Lysle when he called that Miss Merriam was indisposed. The next day he heard that she had sent for Ross to attend her. This his suspicious nature accepted as a direct slap in the face. Ross had no right to invade his professional territory, he hotly reasoned.

To make it worse, he was further advised later in the week that although Miss Merriam was entirely convalescent, Ross was a constant visitor at her home. This infuriated him.

"The Mean, Disloyal Sneak!" Fumed Lysle.

"The mean, disloyal sneak!" fumed Lysle. "He has poisoned her mind against me probably, and has usurped my rightful place as a lover."

So, when the two doctors met one day, Lysle turned with a sneer from the outstretched hand of his former friend.

"You ever speak to me again," he hissed, all that was bad in his impetuous nature to the front, "and I'll break your head!"

Poor Ross was astonished. He wrote a note to Lysle. It was returned, unopened. He sent a mutual friend to attempt an explanation. The intermediary was insulted. Then a month went by. Lysle kept track of Ross. It mightily gratified him when he learned that Ross was doing so much free work for his poor patients, that he had run behind on his bills and had to borrow a few hundred dollars, mortgaging his office furniture as security.

One day Judge Bishop, the leading lawyer of the town, sent for Lysle. When he was seated the attorney picked up a narrow slip of paper.

"Mr. Lysle," he said, "I have some important news for you. Do you remember when you and Doctor Ross came here?"

"I do not wish my name coupled with his!" scowled Lysle.

"It is necessary," proceeded the lawyer, "for you are mutually interested. Both of you attended and saved the life of Mr. John Parkins, a millionaire, who was nearly killed in an automobile crash. Poor man! He did not fully recover. But he appreciated your dual skill. He died last week. In recognition of your services and kindness, he ordered the lawyer before his death to send a certified check for $10,000 to Dr. Juneau Lysle and Dr. Alvin Ross. There it is," and the judge flipped the narrow slip of paper across the desk towards his visitor.

For a moment Lysle sat spellbound. Ten thousand dollars was a fortune! Then a sudden flame flashed into his eyes. He compressed his lips, a cruel satirical smile wreathed them.

"As you see, Doctor Ross has indorsed his name on the back," pursued the lawyer. "If you will add yours, the bank here will cash the check and you fortunate two can divide the money."

The somber expression deepened on the face of the misguided Lysle. A sinister triumph was in his face as he wrote his name on the back of the check, but at the end directly remote from that of his brother practitioner.

"As I understand it," he spoke in a hot hissing tone, "one-half of this check is mine?"

"Certainly."

"To do as I like with it?" pressed Lysle darkly.

"Why, of course."

"Then—Solomon's judgment!" cried Lysle, with a harsh grating laugh. "Give Ross his half. I'll keep mine."

Snip! In a flash Lysle had snatched up a pair of shears lying on the lawyer's desk, with one rapid movement he snipped the precious check directly in two, and arising coolly placed the half he had indorsed in his pocket.

"My dear sir!" expostulated the dumfounded lawyer.

"Just give his half to Ross," jeered Lysle. "I hope it will help him in paying his debts!"

He was out of the office before the judge could detain him. A fierce, wicked hatred in his heart, he fancied he had gained his revenge against the man he believed to have wronged him.

"Not a dollar of it shall he have!" railed Lysle. "I'll see him starve, but I'll break him, even if I have to starve myself!"

He waited for some legal move on the part of his fancied enemy, but none was made. Alvin Ross meekly, sweetly accepted the hard blow the hand of a once trusted friend had dealt him.

The hatred surging in the heart of Lysle poisoned his life. Money he depended on failed him. He became ill. One night he reeled into insensibility and for two weeks lay prostrated with a devouring fever.

It was the second day after regaining consciousness, that he stirred up as he heard the nurse in the next room conversing confidentially with a visiting friend.

"And, oh, my dear, what do you think? The bank failed that the check was drawn on and poor Doctor Ross is robbed of his $5,000. And he took it all with a smile, and when Doctor Lysle got sick here has paid his nursing, and all his bills, and has kept up his practice for him. He's got a reward for his goodness, though."

"How is that?" came inquisitively.

"The sweetest girl in the world for a promised bride."

"You mean Miss Merriam?"

"Oh, dear! no—all the time Doctor Ross was in love with her cousin, Ernestine—an heiress, too! And say—isn't it a strange romance? All the time Vashti Merriam thought the world of Doctor Lysle, and because, naturally, she didn't send for him as her doctor, he fancied all kinds of things, and—"

Juneau Lysle sank back with a groan. Oh, the folly of it all! Oh, the wretched curse of a suspicious, worldly nature!

"Can you ever forgive me the awful wrong I have done you!" he moaned when he had sent for Doctor Ross. "How can I make it all up to you?"

"By getting well and going to see Vashti, who is waiting to welcome you," replied Ross brightly—"by becoming my partner and working together like what we were—brothers!"

And amid the sweet calm that followed all his senseless error, Doctor Juneau Lysle redeemed himself.

Haitian Was a Patriot.

Haiti appears to breed a spirit of sensitive patriotism unknown to other countries, says the London Chronicle. Some years ago a general in the Haitian army ordered an artificial eye. The maker did his best to execute the order satisfactorily, but the eye was returned from Port-au-Prince, with a letter complaining that "the eye you forwarded me is of a tint that resembles the Spanish flag. I am far too patriotic to wear any colors but those of my country." After ascertaining from the ministry of marine the colors of the Haitian standard a scarlet and green eye was dispatched and that met with enthusiastic approval.

Dutch Bulb Caretakers.

If you are getting your share of the millions of bulbs that are now incoming from Holland, you will appreciate the great care the Dutch growers take in preparing their products for the market.

Great trenches are dug, and the soil is allowed to freeze, and this ground is turned over and over again. A thorough freezing process is maintained in the ground, and in this way insect pests are eliminated. Then they pile on manure several feet deep and dig this fertilizer into the ground.

Gas Tubing Out of Glue.

Successful attempts have been made to manufacture a substitute for rubber tubing out of masses of solidified glue. These tubes, whose trade name is sonjatin, are even better than those of rubber for certain purposes, since they are more impervious to gases and more resistant to heat. It is also claimed that they do not grow rotten so quickly as rubber, and that when incased in a suitable envelope they will withstand high pressure.—Scientific American.

AMOS DAVIS,
10 29 3t Woodbine, Md.

The Women's Missionary and Aid Society, of St. Benjamin's Lutheran Church, near this city, will meet Thursday afternoon, November 4th, at two o'clock at the residence of Mrs. James M. Stoner, this city. A full attendance is desired.

One of those harrowing disasters which must distres the most callous-hearted occurred yesterday, at Peabody, Mass., where the building of St. John's Catholic Parochial School was destroyed by fire and twenty children, most of whom were girls, aged from 7 to 17 years, were burned to death. Numbers were also injured. There were 600 children in the building, besides the teachers, when the fire was discovered, many of them on upper floors, but a panic occurred in one room, causing the distressing loss of life, while all in other parts of the building escaped or were rescued.
