EXECUTOR'S SALE OF

4 Large Farms,

LARGE FLOUR MILL AND STORE STAND, AND OTHER SMALL TRACTS WITH DWELLING HOUSES

At and near Carrollton Station on the W. M. R. R.

The undersigned by virtue of the power and authority contained in the last will and testament of Andrew Drechsler, late of Carroll County, Md., deceased, and by virtue of an order of the Orphans' Court of Carroll County, will offer at public Sale on

at 12 o'clock noon sharp on the premises:—

FIRST

What is known as the Home Farm, containing 202 acres, 3 roods and 23 perches, more or less, the buildings being located about three-fourths of a mile from Carrollton station, and about one-fourth of a mile from McGinnis Station on the Western Maryland Railroad. The improvements thereon consist of a two-story frame weatherboarded house, containing 6 rooms, a large bank barn, large dairy and ice house, hog pen, hen house and corn house. All the buildings are in a good state of repair. About 35 acres of this land is in good timber. This is a fine dairy farm, several streams of water running through the land give plenty of fine meadows.

Mrs. Andrew Drechler, owning her mother's interest in part of the above Home Farm, has signed an agreement with the said executor to unite in the deed to the purchaser upon payment to her of a certain amount of money by said executor.

SECOND

We will then proceed to Carrollton Station where said executor will offer at public sale the store stand containing about 6½ acres of land more or less. The improvements consist of a two-story frame weatherboarded store-house and ware-house now occupied by J. E. Evans, and also a two-story weatherboarded double dwelling house, one part being rough cast, containing 11 rooms, also a bank barn, hen house, hog pen etc. The buildings are in a good state of repair. This is an excellent store stand.

THIRD

Said Executor will also offer the Mill property containing about 93 acres of land more or less. The improvements consist of a four story frame weatherboarded well-equipped roller mill having a capacity of 40 barrels of flour a day, has excellent water power and a good trade; it has been making first class flour which has a good reputation. The machinery was put in new two years ago. It is also improved by a 7 room two story stone dwelling house located about ten or twelve yards from the mill; stable and other out buildings. This land includes the the head race and mill dam and about 15 acres are in good timber. The Mill and farm will be offered as an entirety and also in separate parcels and will be sold to the best advantage. Before the sale certain lines will be straightened between the "Home Farm" and the 179 acre farm to the advantage of both, the difference will not exceed 3 or 4 acres.

ON WEDNESDAY, NOVEMBER 10th,

1915, at twelve o'clock noon sharp, the said Executor will offer at Public Sale on the premises what was formerly the Henry Drechsler farm located about 2 1|2 miles from Westminster, Md., on the Baltimore & Reisterstown turnpike, and now occupied by Harry Close as tenant, containing 138 1|20 acres of land more or less. The improvements consist of a two story frame weatherboarded house containing 7 rooms, a good bank barn, hog pen, corn house, chicken house and large barrack. All the buildings are new. This is a fine dairy farm having plenty of meadow land. There are about 6 acres in good timber.

SECOND

A house and lot adjoining the last mentioned farm and on said turnpike containing 3 acres of land more or less. Improved by a two story frame dwelling house, containing 5 rooms, stable, hen house, etc.

THIRD

All that tract of land containing 179 acres, 3 roods and 12 perches more or less, located between the said Henry Drechsler farm and the Home Farm, on the road leading from the Baltimore & Reisterstown turnpike to Carrollton Station, and now occupied by Lewis A. Drechsler, as tenant. The improvements consist of a two story frame weatherboarded house containing 6 rooms, large barn, large barrack, chicken house, hog pen, corn house, spring house, etc. This is also a fine dairy farm with plenty of meadow land. There is about 20 acres in good timber.

All of these farms are in a fine state of cultivation.

All the above properties adjoin and make one continuous piece of land from the Baltimore & Reisterstown turnpike to Carrollton Station and can be viewed in two hours time.

TERMS OF SALE as prescribed by the Court:—

One-third cash on the day of sale or upon the ratification thereof, the residue in two equal payments, the one payable in six months and the other payable in twelve months from the day of sale, the credit payments to be secured by the bonds or single bills of the purchaser or purchasers with sufficient security, bearing interest from the day of sale, or all cash at the option of the purchaser. The personal property of said Andrew Drechsler will be sold November 18, 1915.

For further information address the undersigned or his Attorney.

PROFITABLE MARKET DUCK MANAGEMENT

Excellent Duck Pond and House.

I have kept Mammoth Pekin ducks with considerable pleasure and profit during the past ten or fifteen years. My method is to keep the birds out of the chicken yard so as to prevent the soiling of the water which the chickens have to drink, writes D. C. O. Wells of Fayette county, Illinois, in Orange Judd Farmer. A two-foot wire fence has proved satisfactory. Of course, the chickens can fly over this, but the ducks cannot. In eight weeks from hatching I can make young ducks weigh four pounds each, and by June 1 at this weight can usually get twenty to twenty-five cents a pound in Chicago. During the past years the demand has been increasing annually.

There is no trouble about rearing ducks. The brooding time is only about half as long as that for chickens and the ducklings do not need nearly as much heat in the brooders. Ducklings should always have a bulky feed. I give a mixture of one part each of bran and beef meal to two parts of corn meal. The beef meal must never be omitted as it is essential to make the ducklings thrive and grow large. To the mixture I add about five per cent of sand so as to supply grit. I always have an available supply of clean water for the ducklings to drink, but not enough for them to paddle in. They cannot do more than get their bills wet. It is necessary that they should do this so as to prevent clogging of the nostrils with food.

During warm weather I always provide ample shade. Any shed will do for old ducks if it is dry. I always supply plenty of bedding, such as straw. For nests I place ten-foot boards about a foot from the wall and leave openings at each end so the ducks will not pile up and break the eggs. This space is partly filled with straw in which the ducks bury their eggs.

When I have more than one flock I mate the birds about January, just as I plan to keep them; that is, I make no changes after once having mated the flocks. If this is not done early, any attempt to break up a flock into smaller ones may result unfavorably and any other attempt to unite smaller flocks is likely to be just as undesirable, because each set will separate as soon as they are not watched. It is therefore highly important to form the flocks by New Year's time.

I always keep plenty of oyster shell in the laying quarters. From July 1 to January 1 ducks need scarcely any food if they have access to a good pond. As ducks are usually shy, especially at night, they should have a shed well protected from any possible night movements on the part of men and animals. If not so provided they will be excited all night and keep the whole neighborhood awake. Always during the laying season I keep my ducks shut up until at least seven o'clock so the eggs will not be dropped outside of the house.

CHILDREN'S CORNER

A NEW CHEWING GUM

A gentleman of Westminster, took his wife to the York Fair. During their inspection of the grounds and exibits, one of the exibitors gave this gentleman three or four small fancy packages of a new kind of glue done up in papers, similar to the kind used for chewing gum; he them carefuly in his pocket. A few days after they had come home, his wife was brushing his coat, feeling something in the inner pocket drew out the packages, saying as she did so, there now I just wanted some fresh chewing gum, men are so selfish; and opening one of the papers, put the strip in her mouth. She chewed and she chewed; she tried to bite it, she took it out smelled it, pulled at it, and finally putting on her eye glasses read "Choice Glue, by a new process." The lady sat down suddenly, resolving and declaring, never again would she be caught by anything so deceivingly tough.

Her husband thinks now the Glue Co., would soon make a fortune, if they would only add plenty of sugar and flavoring to their formula and label it, A Tongue Moderator, for then, the married men would all buy it, as gift pacifiers for their wives, when they come home late at night.

"Womans tongue is her sword which she" never lets rust.—Madam Necker.

The Golden Bantam

By Eva Morse Henricks

(Copyright, 1915, by W. G. Chapman.)

"And then you pulled his pigtail!"

"Yes, dear, and then all three scampered."

"And the cute, little yellow man?"

"Wang Fo? He dropped to his knees and kissed my hand, and said I was his preserver, and gave me the golden bantam."

Little Flora Ward sat in the lap of her great friend, Alvin Prescott, immensely interested in quite a tragic recital. He was telling her of an encounter in a dark side street the evening before with three sinister Chinamen. They had backed another yellow-hued countryman against a brick wall. One of the assailants held his throat in a talon-like clutch. A second had imprisoned his arms. A third was advancing to dispatch him with a glittering steel knife, when Prescott intervened.

"And what was the 'golden bantam,' Mr. Prescott?" lisped the interested little one.

Prescott fumbled in his pocket. Eager eyes scanned the odd-looking pin he drew forth. It represented a bantam rampant, with curious script characters on its outspread wings.

"I think the three wicked men were highbinders, my dear," explained Prescott—"that is, men belonging to a cruel society who make a business of killing people they don't like. Poor

"I Have Found Her."

Wang Fo, as he called himself, must belong to some other secret society. I suppose the golden bantam is its emblem, for he kept saying that the bantam pin 'would make me friends with all his people.'"

"What a sweet, cute little pin it is!" said Flora effusively.

"Well, you shall have the trinket," replied Prescott, and pinned it on a band of ribbon at her neck.

"Oh, how good you are!" cried Flora ecstatically, and jumped to the floor and ran over to where a charming young lady was busy at some fancy work. "See, Aunt Lydia—the beautiful pin Mr. Prescott has given me!"

"You are spoiling the child, Mr. Prescott," spoke Miss Ward, but with an indulgent smile.

He did not reply, but his eyes met her own with a rapt, longing expression. She read its meaning—love—not only for the little one, but for herself as well. He seemed about to speak. The memory of what had followed an offer of marriage caused Prescott to control his deep emotion. Soon he left the house.

It was hard to be about daily in the company of the woman he so devotedly loved and refrain from urging her to reconsider her decision. It had been announced in a kindly way, so considerately, in fact, that Prescott half believed that but for circumstances Lydia might have favored his plea. An orphan herself, her life was wrapped up in little Flora, who, having lost both father and mother, was cherished by Lydia as a responsibility to whom she had devoted her life. This much she had told Prescott in answer to his offer of marriage.

There was another suitor—Leslie Shaw. Prescott had never liked him. He was persistent in his attention to Lydia. He was a man about town, with unknown antecedents. Prescott had experienced relief and satisfaction when a servant of the house, with whom he was a favorite, told him of the summary dismissal of his rival.

It seemed that Shaw had importuned Lydia to accept him as her husband. She had given him the same answer that Prescott had received: Her life was bound up in little Flora. The enraged Shaw had fiercely wished the little one was dead, had let loose his wicked temper in a way that shocked and disgusted Lydia. Then Shaw had sworn that he would yet win her as his wife, if it took him ten years to accomplish his purpose, and had gone away in a tempest of wrath.

Lydia never gave any token of that stormy interview, but Prescott was well satisfied that she had a contempt for Shaw She feared him, too, Prescott believed, and, while he was glad that a persistent rival was out of the way, he kept himself on the alert to guard against any attempt to annoy Lydia on the part of Shaw.

One evening the telephone bell in his room rang sharply. His name was spoken breathlessly, and he thrilled and tingled as he recognized the tones of the woman he loved.

"Is it Mr. Prescott?" she asked in a tone that trembled.

"Yes, Miss Ward."

"Will you please come to the house at once—oh, at once, please!" and Prescott dashed from the room, tracing anxiety and urgency in the welcome summons that might mean something helpful for Lydia.

He found her distractedly pacing the floor when he arrived at her home. She was white to the lips and her eyes bore the traces of a poorly suppressed anguish.

"Flora!" she gasped. "She is gone!"

"Gone? You mean—" began Prescott in alarm.

"Stolen, kidnaped, spirited away! She was alone in the garden for an hour playing with her dolls," narrated Lydia. "When I went to call her in she had disappeared.

"But—kidnaped? Impossible!" cried Prescott. "She must have wandered away."

"I found this note on a garden seat," proceeded Lydia. "Read it."

The crumpled scrawl was signed with one name—Shaw—and it ran: "You will hear from me shortly. Unless you agree to marry me you will never see little Flora again."

"The scoundrel!" cried Prescott. "I will set the police on his track at once."

"No! no!" implored Lydia. "You do not know this man Shaw. If any such an attempt is made, he will disappear, and Flora with him. Oh, try and find her! Try and bring me back my lost darling!"

Alvin Prescott had a difficult task before him. Shaw was not to be found at any of his occasioned haunts. No trace was discovered of the missing child. The grief of Lydia was pitiable. Prescott devoted all his time to the mission in hand, but it was of no avail.

It was the fifth morning after the disappearance of Flora, that, walking along the street, he observed a squat oriental figure speed across the thoroughfare to his side. It was Wang Fo.

"I find you!" he cried in extravagant joy. "The pin—of the golden bantam. You lose?"

"No, I gave it to a child—"

"I have found her. You come—come, quick!"

With faint heart of hope Prescott accompanied the half coherent, but intensely excited Wang Fo. He led him to the Chinese quarter of the city, and through sinuous and mysterious passages into what seemed to be a secret lodge room.

There, on a dais, surrounded by Chinese women, was Flora. She was supremely contented, for they had given her all kinds of quaint toys and seemed only bent on entertaining her.

Wang Fo told his story. The child had been brought to some avaricious friends of his to hide or ship to some other city as the order might come. He, Wang Fo, had discovered the golden bantam pin. He had removed the child into the charge of more trusty friends. He had guessed much. It led to seeking out Prescott.

They never heard of Shaw again—"they," for what could come of it, but that the rescuer of the dear little one should prevail upon sweet, loving Lydia to give her a protector for life?

HEALTH BENEFIT OF YAWNING

Expert Advises Regular Exercises as a Measure for Doing Away With Throat and Ear Troubles.

Yawning is said to have an exceedingly healthful function besides having a salutary effect in complaints of the pharynx and the eustachian tubes.

According to investigations yawning is the most natural form of respiratory exercise, bringing into action all the respiratory muscles of the neck and chest. It is recommended that every person should have a good yawn with the stretching of the limbs morning and evening for the purpose of ventilating the lungs and tonifying the respiratory muscles.

An eminent authority asserts that this form of gymnastics has a remarkable effect in relieving throat and ear troubles, and says that patients suffering from disorders of the throat have derived great benefit from it. He says he makes his patients yawn, by suggestion or imitation, or by a series of deep breaths with the lips partly closed.

The yawning is repeated six or seven times, and should be followed by swallowing. By this process the air and mucus in the eustachian tubes are aspirated.

New Plants for America.

The bureau of plant industry reports that its agricultural explorer, F. N. Meyer, who already had many remarkable "finds" to his credit, has recently sent in an unusually interesting collection of new fruits from the Tibetan border of China. These include the Tangutian almond, the Potanin peach, and a notable series of wild forms of the ordinary cultivated peach. Mr. Meyer's latest expedition succeeded in reaching Lanchowfu, when further progress was prevented by the desertion of the interpreter. Recent collections have largely augmented the agricultural department's stock of jujubes and persimmons from western China.
