THE SUCCESS OF FRAUDS

A Department of Agriculture Bulletin calls attention to the selling of certain imitations of foreign patent medicines. The supplies of these being cut off by the war, unscrupulous makers in our country are getting a harvest out of worthless substitutes.

In spite of all the campaign for pure foods and drugs the public must still be vigilant. There is, however, a growing sentiment against false labels.

Herring are good little fish, and they might sell just as well even if they weren't labelled Sardines. Is it necessary to label as calf some shoe cut from the skin of an ancient animal ready to drop from old age? It does not make the boarders like skim milk any better to call it cream. People with an ordinarily developed sense of taste can detect the fact if sugar is partly flour and starch. And if roasted acorns and grains are put into coffee, the consumer detects it, and the dealer who sold it to him suffers.

The American people are rather tolerant with frauds. Public sentiment or public administration seems defective, when the successful adulterator can get away with his deceptions, and ride in the finest automobile and dominate social life. A man with right feeling would never be happy on a fortune earned through deception. But this is an age where few questions are asked as to where money comes from.

It is a period, however, when a great and increasing number of people demand to be "shown." From now on it will be hard to found a successful business on lies. There may be some Get Rich Quick money in it. But the fraud will be shown up, and the faker may have to be idle quite a time before he works up his next scheme. The public values more and more the man who shows up everything about his goods and invites the closest inspection.

A food or medicine maker can make no more sagacious move than to submit his processes to impartial inspection, and secure reliable testimony as to their honesty. Certified goods command liberal prices.

The poor showing made by Yale at football indicates what will happen when a college goes in for such luxuries as study.

CHILDREN'S CORNER

Not long since some ladies were visiting in Westminster from a nearby city. During their stay they sent word to the wife of a professional man they would call to see her on a certain evening which they did. Everything was going on in an apparently cordial interesting way, when down the stairway came little voices calling in no uncertain sound, "Mother, why don't you bring them old maids up here." The mother in her apologies broadened the smile of the visitors who soon laughingly departed to carry their joke further on. It was too good to keep.

An Irishman went to the theater for the first time. Just as the curtain descended on the first act a boiler in the basement exploded and he was blown through the roof, coming down in the next street. After coming to his senses he asked: "An what piece do yez play nixt."—M. Brown.

What are you writing such a big hand for Pat? "Why you see my grandmother is dafe and I am writing a loud letter to her."—M. Brown.

"Caesar, is you a working man?"

"Don't you see me getting away wid dis watermillion."—M. Brown.

WHAT I LOVE

I love the playful lamb—
I love him broiled or roast;
I love the feathered songster, too—
I think him best on toast.

I love the fish that swim the sea—
Fresh from the frying-pan:
I love the retired oyster, too—
I'll eat him when I can.

I love to see the squirrel brisk—
Through the top sights of my gun;
I love the gentle lowing kine—
In tender steaks, rare done.

I love the birds, I love the fish,
I also love the beast;
O, give me all I want to eat,
I'll have a grand love feast.

Some men move through life as a band of music moves down the street, flinging out pleasure on every side through the air, to every one far and near that can listen.

Henry Ward Beecher

SOMEBODY

Somebody did a golden deed;
Somebody proved a friend in need;
Somebody sang a beautiful song;
Somebody smiled the whole day long;
Somebody thought, "Tis sweet to live";
Somebody said, "I'm glad to give";
Somebody fought a valiant fight;
Somebody lived to shield the right;
Was that "Somebody" you?

THE RURAL CREDIT PROBLEM

President Wilson is again urging Congressmen to establish a Rural Credit system, and the agricultural sections are demanding action.

It is of course possible that illusory hopes have been held out to the farmers of the low interest rates to be secured under a Rural Credits organization. The fact that European farmers borrow money for 3 to 4 per cent in this way does not prove the same thing can be done here. Interest rates and labor have always been low abroad. The machinery for such an organization would cost more in this country of higher salaries, and the American investor gets a higher rate on his money.

Still the American farmer is assessed at too high rate for his borrowing. Loaning companies make too much money. Their service as intermediary is necessary to give the borrower security that the property is duly examined and supervised. But many little companies are doing this business on too small a scale for an economical result. Their charge for their service is too high.

The average lender on farm mortgages probably gets about 6 per cent. If the business were standardized, supervised, and consolidated, so that a farm loan would look as good as a railroad bond, the lender might be satisfied with 5 per cent. The borrower would have to pay the intermediary service of the Rural Credit organization, and it is not likely that he will pay less than 6 per cent.

Some of the farmers, particularly in the east, may get their loans now for 6 per cent. But the chances are that the majority pay 7 to 8 per cent including commissions and discounts. This is too much. If this rate could be lowered by Rural Credits organizations, young men would be encouraged to take up farming, and one charge on food production reduced.

From National Republican Congressional Committee.

PREPAREDNESS AND REVENUES

Washington, D. C., November 30.—"National preparedness and national revenues are two problems that go hand in hand.

The Democratic administration proposes the one when it has utterly failed to solve the other."

These are conclusions reached by Representative Frederick H. Gillett, of Massachusetts, ranking minority member of the Appropriations Committee. His statement has greater significance when it is remembered that for weeks Mr. Gillett has been in daily conference with both Democrats and Republicans of the House in an effort to improve the present system of financing government appropriations.

"The question of revenues is the most difficult problem the Democratic party must face when Congress meets," said Mr. Gillett. "Republicans have always claimed that lack of business efficiency was an inherent and inevitable defect in every Democratic administration. That theory has been abundantly illustrated since March 4, 1913.

"Dilatoriness, vacillation, change of plans and deficits have marked the Democratic fiscal policy. A constant excess of expenditures over receipts has been shown by Treasury statements. Furthermore, the sudden change in the form of statements adopted on the first of October whether made for that purpose or not, had the effect of preventing easy comparisons and unfairly swelling the apparent Treasury balance.

"Now the President is going to recommend enormous appropriations for the army and navy. The serious problem will be how to pay them. In the past Republicans have been allowed no voice in these matters. Plans have been formulated by a Democratic sub-committee, endorsed by a Democratic caucus, and passed by a Democratic majority kept solid by the pressure of party tyranny and administration patronage.

"Whether the same system will prevail in the coming session will depend, I suppose, upon the harmony in the Democratic ranks and the necessities of the administration. At all events I think the funds necessary for the program should be raised by taxation and not by the sale of bonds. The proposed expenditures for national defense should be paid from current revenues.

"This involves cutting off our luxuries and pruning down our necessities on the one hand, and increasing our income on the other.

"It involves surveying the field from a business and not from a political or sectional viewpoint and that is where I fear Democratic failure Unless the party can meet the situation with better business foresight and efficiency than it has so far displayed, the current drift toward the Republican party will become a landslide."

From the Republican Publicity Association.

A RULE OR RUIN POLICY

The New York "World" is for Wilson and it sometimes affects to speak for Wilson. We wonder if it speaks for Wilson when it says:

"One of two things will happen in Washington at the coming session of Congress. Either the Administration's programme will be adopted or there will be no increase in the army and navy."

There can be only one interpretation of this language. It means that the Wilson plan of preparedness must be swallowed in its entirety by Congress under the painful alternative of military unreadiness.

Yet it is already known that there are not enough Democratic votes in Congress to adopt the President's plan. If that plan is adopted it must be by Republican support. Does the "World" wish the country to understand that Republicans must vote for legislation in the framing of which they are to have no voice? Is the President's recent and sudden conversion to the cause of preparedness so thorough that he has already mastered all the essentials of the problem? Has he, after a few weeks, been able to formulate a plan which, running counter as it does to that of the experts in the War and Navy Departments, is nevertheless superior to anything that those experts suggest? Is the President infallible?

The policy which the "World" suggests is a rule-or-ruin policy. Such a policy has too often marked this Administration already—with consequent disaster to the nation's enterprise and honor. If it is now purposed to apply this policy with disaster to the nation's fate in case of war, that fact should be plainly made known. Is that what the "World" wants the country to understand?

A press dispatch says that "both parties will seek campaign material during the coming session of Congress." No need for the Republican party to do much searching. Its own record in the upbuilding of American industry during a period of sixteen years of protective tariff, its achievements in the establishment of the merit system in the public service, its enactment of such commendable legislation as the Postal savings bank law, the pure food law, Panama canal construction, the reclamation law, conservation, the income tax amendment, the popular election of senators amendment, and other measures too numerous to mention, furnish an abundance of affirmative campaign material. The Democrats have, in two years supplied plenty of material with which to attack them. Extravagance, resort to the spoils system, violation of pledges, demoralization of public service, are matters of public record and require no searching.
