DANGERS OF DRAFT

Drafts feel best when we are hot and perspiring, just when they are most dangerous and the result is Neuralgia, Stiff Neck, Sore Muscles or sometimes an attack of Rheumatism. In such cases apply Sloan's Liniment. It stimulates circulation to the sore and painful part. The blood flows freely and in a short time the stiffness and pain leaves. Those suffering from Neuralgia or Neuralgic Head ache will find one or two applications of Sloan's Liniment will give grateful relief. The agonizing pain gives way to a tingling sensation of comfort and warmth and quiet rest and sleep is possible. Good for Neuritis too. Price 25c, at your Druggist 1

THE ROADSIDE TREE LAW

Its Provisions But Slightly Affected by Recent Legislation; Its Enforcement Still Guarantees Shade Tree Protection and Civic Improvement Where it is Most Essential.

At the last legislative session the Maryland General Assembly enacted an Amendment to the State's Roadside Tree Law as passed by the previous Legislature. This Amendment carried a minor modification of the State-wide Law that trees belonging within public rights-of-way shall be handled as such, not cut down or indiscriminately trimmed to satisfy the whim of anyone who happens to object to their being beside the roadway, whether the objector were the abutting householder, a professional trimmer, or someone whose wires were in the way of the trees.

The exception states—"That trees standing within the right-of-way of unimproved public roads which have not been surfaced with either stone, shell, gravel, concrete, brick, asphalt, or other improved surface may be cut down and removed by the abutting landowner for his own use without first obtaining a permit." This passage, taken verbatim from the law, defines clearly and exactly the only change made by the Legislature of 1916 since its passage by the body of 1914. This exception was inserted at the instance of the Board of Forestry, which must enforce the Law.

Since the enactment of this measure practically the only objection disinterestedly raised by anyone who has witnessed it in application has occurred over the protection accorded trees shading unimproved highways. These latter, of course, seldom traverse the most populous districts, being in consequence not heavily travelled and their appearance more a matter of local than general concern. People residing beside them must therefore look to their appearance, and the Amendment places the trees of the abutting landowner altogether in his hands, for his own use. The trees lining such roads are very frequently of nearly valueless specimens and species, often as well being so placed along the narrow roads that occasionally they interfere with the operations of adjoining farmers.

Those favoring greater latitude in the governing of these particular conditions, reenforced in certain cases by others who for other reasons wished also to have the bars let down, variously advanced and advocated a number of revisions and exceptions which were impractical to a greater or less degree, some of them applying only in one county, some in one or two others. When these had for the greater part been dropped, those who had originally interested themselves in securing the Roadside Tree Law or the State decided that the above given modification of this Act most nearly met the situation from all sides, safely and satisfactorily.

This change cannot detract in the slightest from the proper shading of largely traveled, improved highways, though at the same time it gives to such landowners as may have property rights alongside unimproved highways authority to themselves remove forthwith any offending shade trees, for their own use. At the same time the public, along any roadway—improved or unimproved, macadamized or dirt—will continue to be thoroughly protected in the matter of its shade trees from the operations of persons, not the owners, who for personal reasons might destroy or damage public shade trees.

This is a slight change in a modern, constructive piece of legislation, passed for the good of the State as a whole, enforced since its enactment for the direct welfare of the public. This amendment will be a further aid to its more general understanding, enforcement and benefits.

MARYLAND WEEK AND THE MARYLAND CORN AND POTATO CLUB BOYS.

A peculiar enterprise has been projected, apparently by the Baltimore Sun, for the purpose of attracting large numbers of the country people of the State to the city during Maryland week. What is demonstrated, by a letter, or circular, received by the Sentinel as a pathfinding automobile tour will begin at Crisfield June 3rd and will traverse a route from that place to Oakland, during the succeeding days up to June 15th. Maryland week will occur immediately after the close of this tour, and the exercises attending it will be held in the Fifth Regiment Armory. The Pathfinding automobile tour will be in charge of Reuben Brigham, who has charge of the Corn and Potato Club work for the Federal government and the Maryland Agricultural College, and Henry E. Warner, representing the Sun, will be director of the tour. It is stated that the part of the prize winning Corn and Potato Club Boys along the route be to boose the Maryland Week Exposition and invite all the people to visit Baltimore during that time. The itinerary program of the Pathfinding provides that the automobile will visit three places each day at which addresses will be made.

Fourteen of the places are on the Eastern Shore and thirteen on the Western Shore. Only one place, Ridgeville, will be touched in this county. For the dates of June 12th and 13th, the itinerary is as follows: June 12th—10 a m. Ellicott City, Patapsco National Bank; 4 p. m. Ridgeville; 8 p. m. Frederick, Y. M. C. A. June 13th—10 a. m. Middletown; 4 p. m. Clear Spring; 8 p. m. Hagerstown.

The Sentinel would be glad to give a more specific description of this unique enterprise, but the letter from which this statement is made up is rather obscure. Its readers, however, will probably understand that the main purpose of the tour described, is to advertise Maryland week and attract a large attendance at the Fifth Regiment armory.

EXCURSION TO NEW PEN-MAR PARK

Decoration Day is the first of the summer holidays, and a great many persons always take advantage of it for a trip away from home.

At New Pen-Mar Park workmen have been busy for several days cleaning and brightening it up, until now it looks better than ever, and everyone may be assured of a pleasureable day of outing, picnicing and other enjoyable amusement.

The Western Maryland Railway will, in accordance with its usual custom, run an excursion. The schedules are most convenient and the fares are very low, as will be noted in their advertisement appearing elsewhere in this paper. Any agent will gladly give full information.

There is a feeling out on the road that a fellow who gets out and runs his machine only 20 miles an hour, is an obstructor of the highway.

LEAP YEAR PROPOSALS

By LOUISE OLIVER.

Hope Lambing shut the door of the teacher's room softly but firmly, and gave the key a surreptitious turn. She looked around cautiously, then started to count noses. "We're all here!" she exclaimed in excited and subdued tones.

The others glanced at one another with understanding.

Hope glued her ear to the door of an anteroom that led to the office. "He's not here yet, but he couldn't hear anyway."

"Of whom are you speaking?" inquired Charity Brown precisely.

"Him, of course! The professor!"

"Well, what about the professor?"

"He has just inherited a fortune, girls—a fortune—think of it! They say it's nearly a million dollars, or it's in pounds, I believe, for it's English, and they say there is a title that goes with it. But I'm not sure of that—"

The excitement caused by this remark was obvious.

"But how do you know all this is true?" inquired Genevieve Travis.

"I can't tell that. I'm not permitted, but his lawyer and my cousin—oh, girls, I can't say any more."

"But Hope, why the flutter? What's back of it all?" asked Genevieve. "You still have something up your sleeve or I miss my guess. If you don't hurry up and tell I believe you'll burst."

Hope giggled again. "Oh, don't you see, girls? He's not married!" she whispered dramatically.

"Well!" in chorus.

"And it's leap year."

A sudden silence fell upon the room. Hope looked triumphantly from one to another.

Then a bell began to ring and they heard a man's voice in the hall. "We must go now," said Hope. "It's up to you girls to do the rest. But it seems to me that fifteen young and attractive women, who pride themselves on having brains, would be very foolish to let a million dollars and a good-looking man get out of this building single and unpromised in leap year. Sh! Don't let another soul know it or it will spoil our chance. Two months yet, and let the best man win!" She opened the door and went out, followed by fourteen teachers, who smiled guiltily as they passed a man standing by his office door. John Aylmer looked after them quizzically.

Hope Lambing went into No. 4 and he caught a flash of her eyes as the door closed. There was something disturbing in that glance, and he felt an uneasiness he could not explain.

"I suppose I was a bit hateful about things this morning," he reflected. "Really, she's about the best teacher in the building, but I didn't need to get nasty about the spelling. I thought she'd hit me when I tore up those papers! I wish I didn't feel so devilish in the morning when I've been out to a party the night before.

The door of No. 4 opened to let the children in and he caught another flash of Hope's eyes. He had taken two steps in that direction, but retreated hastily. "Hanged if I'll apologize! She's perfectly capable of taking care of herself. She's pretty when she's mad, though! By Jove, she's always pretty! She has a smile and a voice that would coax a bird off a tree."

The school filled and quieted. Doors closed and a gong rang. The afternoon work was on.

In the next week, it was wonderful how head dressings took on waves and puffs, flat heels grew inches high and cheeks bloomed. Smiles were everywhere—yet there was a certain exclusiveness quite apparent among the teachers, who regarded one another with suspicious coolness. None of this, however, reached the puzzled principal, who had never experienced such overwhelming attention as he was now receiving. Perplexity turned to wariness when Genevieve Travis asked for a private interview, and as delicately as she could, suggested herself as a fitting life mate for him. He refused her offer as kindly as he could, but firmly.

The next day Charity Brown, plainly and without any varnishing, popped the question. Professor Aylmer retreated instantly, thinking she had lost her senses. But in the next fortnight he had received fourteen perfectly good proposals of marriage, all of which he had humbly and gratefully declined.

There was one person left. Hope Lambing had not come forth to offer her heart and hand. This puzzled him more than anything else.

One day after four o'clock he was taking requisition slips to the first floor rooms. In No. 4 Hope Lambing was sealing a letter at her desk, but her eyes, instead of flashing defiance, were full of real tears.

"It's my resignation," she said, brokenly. "I can't stand it here any longer. The whole place is hateful to me! I'll never play another practical joke as long as I live," vehemently. Then followed a confession of her plan to get even with her superior. "And, after all, it was only cruel to those poor souls here," she went on. "I'm ashamed of myself!"

"You needn't be!" he declared. "They are a lot of geese. Hope, dear, I love you. Could you take me on eighteen hundred a year and a heart full of devotion?"

"I—" She hesitated, then smiled suddenly. "Why, yes, I suppose I could!"
