TWO CONFESSIONS

By EARL SILVERS.

Henry Riker had been at the Ferncliff boarding house just thirteen days, and during that time he had won the worshiping admiration of Mildred Graydon. He was to go home on the morrow. In spite of the fact that the board was only five dollars a week and the majority of the guests were shop girls, he had had a delightful time. But that had been because of Mildred. She semed different from the other girls; her voice was softer, her clothes simpler, her English better. She didn't say "Ain't that wonderful."

They had both arrived on the same day and had met at supper. After that they had been together continually, until Henry admitted to himself that he was almost in love. But on the evening before he was to return to the daily grind of business he stood on the veranda of the low, rambling farmhouse and looked dejectedly at two chickens pecking aimlessly on the front lawn. He was about to make a confession, and he didn't know how Mildred would take it.

Henry looked up and smiled as a dark-haired, blue-eyed girl tripped lightly down the steps and accosted him.

"Are we going out on the lake?" she asked.

"If you want to."

They made their way together to the small lake, unchained a rather dilapidated looking boat and embarked. For a time both were silent. Then the girl spoke.

"I wonder—" she let her eyes rest on his for a moment—"I wonder if we will ever see each other again."

He looked startled.

"Why, of course, won't we?"

"I don't know; I've read a lot about these summer affairs, and have seen movies, too. They never seem to last very long."

"Maybe it won't be so with us," he said finally.

"Why maybe?" She looked at him questioningly.

"I've got a confession to make," he announced hesitatingly. "But I don't know whether I ought to make it or not!"

"What kind of a confession?"

"About myself. I've come up here with all these shop girls and clerks and made believe that I am one of them!" A slight tinge of red crept over his forehead. "But I'm not. My father is E. P. Riker, the big manufacturer, and we've loads and loads of money."

"And you came up here?" She seemed incredulous.

"Yes. I came for the fun of the thing—just to see what it would be like."

"Oh!" He didn't look up; he was afraid to meet her eyes.

"And now," he concluded, "you'll probably think I have been playing with you. But I haven't; I'm really crazy about you."

He made bold this time to glance at her, but instead of the hurt look he expected he surprised a smile on her face.

"Don't you care?" he asked.

"Why, no!" She continued to smile at him. "I knew you weren't one of those people as soon as I saw you. That's why I let you go with me so much. My father is Arthur Graydon, the big New York doctor."

"What!" His jaw dropped from sheer amazement.

"Yes. I am Doctor Graydon's daughter. I'm glad to know that you are what you are, because now you can come to see me in New York."

"Yes," he answered, "that will be fine."

But, somehow, his words failed to carry conviction. He took up the oars and rowed slowly toward the shack which was called a boathouse. The girl, too, seemed rather thoughtfully silent, and he ventured to glance at her. He was struck with the sudden desire to reach over and touch her hand; but he did not. Neither said a word until the boat struck the bank with a dull thud. Then the man spoke.

"I've got another confession to make," he said, and this time his voice was steady. "I've just been lying to you. My father is Tom Riker, and he works in a factory in Hoboken. I'm a floor-walker in Tracy's."

"What!" This time it was the girl who registered amazement.

"Yes," he continued. "I'm a four-flusher. I thought at first that this was only a summer flirtation and that we would forget about it as soon as we went home. So I told you I was rich in order to make a good impression. But, as soon as you told me who you really are, I realized that I—that I—cared for you. But now, I guess it's all over!"

The girl was silent for a moment, but when she spoke her voice equaled his in frankness.

"I've got a confession to make, too," she said softly. "I never laid my eyes on Doctor Graydon; my father is janitor of a building on Fulton street."

"And you're not rich?" His eyes gleamed hopefully.

"No," she answered. "I'm poor; I'm a shopgirl in Baumann's."

"Would you marry a man who makes eighteen dollars a week?"

"Yes." She looked at him bravely.

He took up the oars, his face alight with a new understanding.

"Let's row out to the end of the lake," he said.

Democratic newspapers are boasting of the wage increases of the "past year." Why not talk about wages while the Democratic tariff law was in effect and before the war gave a temporary stimulus to American business.

THE SOCIALIST VOTE

Enthusiastic predictions based on previous election results are being made as to the growth of the Socialist vote at the November election. It is quite possible that these predictions will be realized. There are a great many people who are swayed by sentimental and dreamy ideals.

The socialists are voluble talkers and can rattle off statistics by the yard. They can point to plenty of flaws in the present social structure, and can have no difficulty in finding injustice and suffering. They find instances both in this country and Europe where government enterprises have seemed on the face of it to work out a profit for the people.

Yet a little examination usually shows that you can prove anything on earth by statistics. The low fares on foreign electric roads owned by municipalities do not look so low, when you figure that those roads are able to hire labor and buy materials at low prices. Also they operate in crowded towns and do not carry people long distances and give free transfers as in this country. Also in those countries politics is divorced more from public business. In our country a man would have to belong to the right political faction to get a job on a government enterprise. That does not promote efficiency.

A socialist orator may quote statistics by the mile, but if his ideas go against plain facts of every day life, he wins a few votes from practical men. The common sense citizen looks around him and sees the government building $100,000 post offices, involving interest charges and upkeep of $5000 to $10,000 annually, in towns where a $1500 annual rental would fill all needs.

As he sees the waste and favortism manifest in government work, he is little inclined toward socialistic government enterprises, until the politicians learn the A. B. C's of the business efficiency.

THE SENTINEL'S ADVERTISING SCHOOL. LESSON NO. 3

The buying of household and personal supplies is a big problem. At present high prices it is one giving most people no little anxious thought. Everyone is trying to secure at reasonable prices goods that will give satisfaction, and often the quest seems vain.

The customer is anxiously looking for information and cold facts. Anything throwing light on the real character of an article is read with keen interest. Customers like to know about materials and manufacturing processes so they can judge for themselves. They do not want simply the salesman's judgment, but they want to know just why he thinks and so and so.

The best advertising is the advertising that gives information about goods so that the buyer can get a good idea of just what they are. Then he can form an impression when a low price is offered, whether the goods are second rate, or whether the merchant has picked up a special value.

A half told idea is never effective. Here are two ads of Men's underwear that express a great difference.

Genuine French Lisle Men's Underwear, regular $1.00 goods, only 50 cents a garment.

Men's Underwear of Genuine French Lisle; Shirts have French neck, ribbed bottoms, and pearl buttons; Draws have French satine top and long Otis gusset—regular $1.00 goods, now 50 cents a garment.

Can anyone doubt that the second of these two ads is much the better? Our guess would be that it would sell three times as many goods. Here are two more contrasting examples of the same idea:

Men's Fashionable Ties—were 50 cents, now 25 cents.

Men's Fashionable Ties, comprising pure silk tecks and four in hand—latest knots and patterns, some with wide flowing ends, were 50 cents, your choice, 25 cents.

Can there be any question that the second form would attract a lot more interest?

If the Republicans had nominated any man except Hughes, the Democratic press would today be laudnig Hughes as the one man the Republicans should have nominated. The rank and file of the Democratic party know that to be the case, and hundreds of thousands of them are going to mark their ballots for Hughes and Fairbanks in November.

Administration campaign managers will not overlook the fact that mobilization of the national guard will afford a satisfactory explanation for some items of increased expense and that possibly this may furnish a plausible explanation for increased taxes. Formerly, it was the war in Europe that caused increased Federal taxes. Now it will be the war or the threatened war with Mexico.

LITERARY FLAVOR IN NEWSPAPERS

The purchase by Frank Munsey of the New York Sun, and the consolidation of the same with the New York Press, has set a host of newspaper writers and readers to talking about the distinctive characteristics for which the old Sun was so famous. Other newspapers have had an equally strong individuality, but it would be hard to find anywhere in the world a journal that attracted to its staff such brilliant staff of writers, with such a gift for picturesque description.

Much as the literary flavor of the Sun under Mr. Dana has been admired, there seems no great demand now for newspaper work of that type. Plenty of men of literary gifts are employed in newspaper work. But the hustle and drive of modern newspaper production tends to repress literary feeling and blunt the edge of this form of genius.

Producing a popular newspaper has become a matter of systematic, energetic, and untiring collection of news rather than that of a facial, graceful or sparkling style of putting it into words. The modern reporter is sent out to cover the wildest ground, to tramp the greatest number of miles, to interview the greatest number of people.

Whereas once he was given little more leeway in the production of his copy, and could revise and brighten his thought, now his news may be delivered off hand over the telephone. It has as much literary grace and feeling as any off hand conversation that you hear in railroad train or street car, and not a bit more. The public demands to know what has happened and it does not insist that the story be told with any regard to rhetorical force or even grammatical construction.

To many discriminating readers, this change has been unwelcome. Yet modern methods of news collecting are so systematic and thorough and untiring that it produces journals that are very faithful and inclusive records of human activity. They may lack sparkle, yet are a wouderful transcript of human life.

DAIRY FACTS

RIGHT RULES FOR DAIRYMEN

Wisconsin Agricultural College Gives Out Some Good Advice That Every Farmer Should Follow.

The dairy department of the Wisconsin college of agriculture is urging that the following be pasted up in every dairy barn in the state:

Practice the following advice and you will make more dollars in dairying. Others have done it. Why can't you?

Use purebred dairy sires from cows having large and profitable productions of milk and butterfat.

Raise well the heifer calves from cows which for one or more generations have made large and profitable productions of milk and butterfat.

Purebred Holstein Calf.

Breed heifers at the age of sixteen to twenty months.

Feed heifers liberally and milk regularly.

Do not try to save feed by turning to pasture too early.

Provide plenty of pure, fresh water, shade and protection against flies during hot weather.

Supplement poor pastures with corn silage or green soiling crops like rye, peas, oats, green corn fodder, cabbage and other available feed.

Feed cows daily one pound of grain in winter for every three pounds of milk produced, 25 to 40 pounds of corn silage, and what clover or alfalfa hay they will eat.

Do not turn cows out to remain and suffer in cold, stormy weather.

Allow them to have water which is not colder than that from a deep well twice or three times daily.

Brush cows daily if you can possibly find the time, for it pays better than does grooming of horses, which as a rule is not neglected.

Keep cows in clean, well-lighted properly-ventilated stables.

Treat cows gently and avoid excitement.

Weigh the milk of each cow at milking time.

Get your neighbors to share with you in owning a Babcock milk tester and test the milk of each cow.

Discard the cow which has failed at the end of the year to pay market price for all the feed she has consumed.

BABCOCK TEST AND SCALES

Instruments for Ascertaining Correct Value of Dairy Cow—Outlay Is Not at All Large.

The Babcock test and scales are instruments for ascertaining the correct value of the dairy cow with reference to her milk and butterfat production. The test is simple, accurate and easily mastered by anyone who will give the matter careful study and attention, taking the necessary time for the work. Those who prefer not to devote the time should join a cow-testing association, for it does not pay to keep unprofitable cows.

A small four-bottle tester with glassware and full directions can be secured for about $5 of any creamery supply company.

ESTABLISH THE MILK FLOW

Best Time Is When Cow Is Fresh and Should Take From Three to Four Weeks—Feed Liberally.

The time to establish the milk flow of the cow is when she is fresh. It should take three to four weeks to bring her to a full flow of milk and to eating a full ration. There is no other time in the period of lactation when care and judgment have such important bearing upon her year's record.

The dairy cow should be fed liberally, but care should be taken not to overfeed her and carry her beyond her capacity. This works injury not only to her milk function, but to her breeding powers.

Selling to Private Customers.

Selling butter to private customers is almost a business by itself. You must have the market close to hand and you must be able to manufacture gilt-edged butter and give proper delivery and be a salesman besides. Really, furnishing butter to private customers might be separated from dairy farming. It is a separate business, but one man can handle both.

"The Best Possible Newspaper"

What sort of a paper is it? In the first place, it must be a Home Paper—the Woman's Friend and a part of her daily life. And it must be a NECESSITY to the Business Man. It must not only tell what is happening in the world, but it must go farther and tell why it is happening and what it means.

The best possible Newspaper has a staff of correspondents covering the world field of the Associated and United Press, scouring the earth for vital human facts. It has fashion and art, books and music, literature and politics at its right hand. It has the markets for the farmer, the merchant, the broker.

The world has never seen an age of greater constructive significance in politics, in science, in society. Every move in the field of action is a topic for discussion in cities, villages, hamlets, at cross-roads. And the Best Possible Newspaper must equip its readers for intelligent understanding of all these things.

That is precisely why it is the simple truth that for your purposes, and for the purpose of the whole South, the BEST POSSIBLE NEWSPAPER is
