100-Day Velvet Beans.

This new Velvet Bean is rapidly forging to the front, both as a forage and soil-improver. At the low price at which these can be secured they are really the cheapest of summer forage and soil-improving crops, and their use is likely to increase to a very considerable extent in the place of cow peas and soja beans. We strongly recommend their more extensive use.

POULTRY FACTS

STAND FOR SPROUTING OATS

One of Simpler Forms of Sprouters May Be Constructed by Poultryman at Little Expense.

On the farm, where the poultry has free range, they do not lack for green food during the summer, late spring and early autumn. In the absence of a supply of roots and vegetables, sprouted oats may be fed with splendid results in winter. The egg production of farm flocks given a feed of sprouted oats daily during the winter will increase materially and the flock will go into the spring hatching season in much better condition than if green food is not included in the ration. The hens never tire of fresh, tender sprouted oats, and of all green foods they seem to relish this the most.

The simplest method of sprouting oats which we have ever used is a rack made about 30 inches square and 5 feet high, says a writer in Farmers' Mail and Breeze. Wooden trays 2 inches deep and 30 inches square are made to fit this rack and slide in and out on cleats nailed to each side of the rack. These cleats are placed about 8 or 10 inches apart. In the bottom of each tray we bore gimlet holes so the water will drain from the oats. We place the rack in some basement or cellar. We soak the oats in water over night, and the next morning these are placed in a tray and spread out until they are about 1½ inches deep. The oats are sprinkled each day and no artificial heat is used. In six or seven days' time the oats are ready for use. Where we use no artificial heat we are not troubled with mold. This is a cheap and easy method of providing green food if you are properly equipped for sprouting oats.

VENTILATION OF HEN HOUSE

Open-Front Method of Construction Muslin Front and Wind Bafflers Keep Out Dampness.

Eliminate the dampness by proper ventilation and the house will be dry and free from frost. This is accomplished by the open-front method of construction, the muslin front, and the wind bafflers or shutters.

When muslin is used, allow one square foot of muslin placed on the south side to every 15 square feet of floor space in houses of 15 feet in width. If the house is ten feet wide use one square foot of muslin to 20 feet of floor space, says Twentieth Century Farmer. In houses 20 feet in width allow one square foot of muslin to every 10 square feet of floor space.

The above rule also applies for the installation of the shutter or wind baffler.

The illustrated types of wind bafflers have been found satisfactory for poultry houses and may be made from either galvanized iron or wood.

In constructing the above bafflers use 1-by-4s and leave one inch space between for circulation.

POULTRY NEED FRESH WATER

Permanganate of Potash Acts as Antiseptic in Preventing Transmission of Many Diseases.

Chickens need a constant supply of fresh water, according to W. A. Lippincott, professor of poultry husbandry in the Kansas Agricultural college.

"Running water is best," says Professor Lippincott, "but if this is not available, keep the water fresh. Add enough permanganate of potash to make it a wine red. This amount will act as an antiseptic in preventing the transmission of disease through the water and will aid also in keeping down internal parasites."

For Camp or Campus

Yale Graduates Plan Huge Rally

To pledge their services to the country and to continue their university as the greatest military training school in the land, thousands of Yale graduates are now preparing to hold a huge war council in New Haven at the coming commencement according to advices received at the headquarters of the Yale Alumni University Fund Association in New York. Around a campus that is being turned into a camp of field artillery, naval and coast defense, engineer corps, aerial patrol and observation, medical and other units, the alumni of classes from three years to half a century back will mobilize to shout their slogan—"For God, for Country and for Yale." As the result of this patriotic pilgrimage, not only will all the men and work of Yale be devoted to defense training on a large scale, but support to tide the university over the critical period of its sacrifice of students and service to the government will be offered, it is prophesied by the men who are sounding the sentiment of the returning graduates.

Instead of the campus celebrations that in time of peace are prepared for the members of the many classes at commencement reunions, the alumni who are ready to rally at Yale this year will find their college either empty of students or an organized war post with every available undergraduate in uniform. Already many units of the Reserve Officers' Training Corps are beginning daily drills in artillery tactics at sunrise before the doors of the dormitories, while the harbor swarms with students enrolled in the Yale Naval Training Unit and the Coast Defense Reserve. In addition a number of Aerial Coast Patrol units, made up of the New Haven undergraduates, are flying in various parts of the country, and an engineer corps and mobile field hospital units are in process of formation.

With many of these soldier students sure to be called away from their college courses as soon as they are trained for service the university is today facing a financial sacrifice of hundreds of thousands of dollars annually in the consequent curtailment of tuition and room rent fees. Following a conference to be called next month by the college terasury and alumni fund officials, a statement of this serious situation that must be faced by Yale as a patriotic duty will be drawn up for presentation to the graduates at their commencement council. Every man who has been educated at New Haven will be given the opportunity to add to his pledge to support his country a guarantee of his willingness to keep Yale alive through her alumni fund, to which every graduate may contribute any amount.

"Next to God and Country, Yale is being remembered by her graduates even in these trying times, as our communications from alumni all over the country show," said Henry S. Brooks, Chairman of the Yale Alumni University Fund Association at its headquarters, 50 Vanderbilt avenue, New York. "At this most memorable reunion in Yale history, we are being assured, an army of Yale men will meet, first of all to help their country, and then to help Yale in its present emergency."
