n.d. Galloway C. Morris Incoming letters (Emily Hollingsworth) 1994

SIDE ONE

Dear, as we could decide to do, I feel anxious to send it to you. Yours, I am sending it in the paper. As I very seldom read newspapers, I should not have, otherwise, seen it. Inclosed please find letter for "Broken E. B. Dunant," (that address is all the Danish I know) with a check in it for you to fill up, when you learn what the 300 Kroner will be. The last Draft was for 250, but I alternate; one time 250 Kroner, next 300, which I believe prevents EBD from being harassed for the means and who was unanimously elected to preside over the Synod. Your father has been comfortable all day, tho' quiet & rather depressed. (I tell you just how he is, you may be sure) and had a good night, has retired early & said he thought he should sleep. Would have gone to the evening service at the Moravian chapel, but it rained too hard. Have had continuous rain through the afternoon, pouring at times. Shall be glad to see you, whenever you can come conveniently, deed or no deed. Best love to dear Hal & the boys.

Your loving & grateful
Cousin Emily

My dear Galley

Thanks for your letter, of this morning handed me to-night by Mr Cannon. We were seated in the dining-room, as a fire had been made there in the heater & your father had fallen asleep in his chair. I think he did not hear Mr Cannon come in and give me your letter, so I have said nothing to him to-night, perhaps in the morning I may mention having had a note from you, saying
