In a bulletin on the employment of women in the storage and warehousing depots of the United States Army is the following: "The census of 1910 reported that of every 199 men and boys 10 years of age and over, only 19 were not gainfully employed. This group of 19 included old men not able to work, children too young to work, the sick and handicapped, and men in schools and colleges. Assuming that 500,000 of the number called by the selective-service law have had some form of gainful employment, we may estimate that 1 out of every 60 men in the industries and professions of the country has been called into military service, while another in every 60 has voluntarily joined the forces of the Army or Navy. Thus, about 3 per cent. of the gainfully employed men have been taken out of their occupations."

The Committee on Public Information has made the following translation of an article appearing in the Bremer Buerger-Zeitung: "A soldier's wife who had gathered wood in the common forest of Waldkirch, near Freiburg in Breisgau, was sentenced for the offence in the following terms: "Mrs. Clara Ganter, on June 18, 1917, has removed from the common forest of Waldkirch, Sec. I 23, one fagot of dry fir twigs of the value of 10 pfenning. In punishment thereof she is sentenced to a fine of 1 mark and one day's imprisonment.' "The husband of the culprit has been for three years at the front, she herself has four small children to support in the direst poverty. Similar reports of punishment should be reported in greater numbers. Our bureaucracy understands how to employ this period of shortage of wood and coal on a large scale for the benefit of the treasury."

More than half a million books already have been furnished soldiers and sailors in training camps and in France by the American Library Association War Service and the flow is steadily increasing, according to the director of this work. A campaign for funds inaugurated by the association last autumn netted more than $1,500,000 and real results in the tangible shape of books and comfortable libraries are being felt by the soldiers and sailors. The Carnegie Corporation gave $320,000 for the erection of camp libraries. Nearly all camps now have libraries and in the others the buildings are incourse of construction. The reading rooms each accommodate 250 men. For the men in France the association has organized distributing stations at all points of embarkation, where books are assorted for shipment abroad. Soon every soldier who steps on a transport will carry a book with him, which he and his companions will read on the way across, after which it will be forwarded to the men back of the trenches. No attempt will be made to establish libraries in France, but the association will have representatives there to supervise the work of distribution.

EXCLUSIVE IN YOUR COUNTRY

Every citizen should be deeply impressed with his obligation to do his best, whatever his walk in life and whatever his occupation, assuming it to be legitimate. Loyalty is just as important in the furrow or the forest as it is in the trenches.

In a recent address to the officers and employees of the railroads, Secretary McAadoo said that "the government having assumed possession and control of the railroads for the period of the present war with Germany, it becomes more than ever obligatory upon every officer and employee to apply himself with unreserved energy and unquestioned loyalty to his work."

This is an unfortunate expression, and, if the idea should be generally accepted, it would tend to make men in private employment less appreciative of the importance of faithful work. Railroad employees are under nogreater obligation to apply themselves now than they were before the government assumed control. The emergency is no greater now than it was before. It was and still is every railroad employee's duty to devote the best there is in him to the task of moving traffic as promptly and as speedily as possible. It is the duty of every man, in either priavte or public employment, to make every moment of time and every pound of effort produce the best results for the strength of the nation at a time when all that nation's strength is needed for self preservation.

A FRACTIONAL FACTOR

It seems to be freely conceded that the President's influence, was a large factor in producting the favorable vote for the suffrage amendment in the House of Representatives. His influence, of course, was with members of his own party. The vote showed 104 Democratic voting for suffrage and 102 Democrats voting against it. The majority for suffrage in the whole House was exactly two-thirds of one vote. We do not know whether these figures are to be taken as a measure of the President's influence or not. They are fairly suggestive, at any rate.

THE MANY IN ONE

"The President," said Secretary Lane, "is our war council." The Secretary's truthfulness exposed the weakness of the system under which the United States is now waging war. The President is not a soldier, he is not a business man, he never was a legislator. Yet he "is our war council." The Council of National Defence, eveun if he were inclined to listen to that body, is no better off. Its membership comprises two lawyers a college president, a retired business man, an editor, and a labor union official. And so "the President is our war council." This narrows the responsibility even as it widens the danger.

WHY BUY IN ASIA?

It is announced that the soy bean is three times richer in protein than wheat bread or eggs, five times as rich as corn meal flour, has ten times as much fat as our commonly used cereals, contains twice as much protein as porterhouse steak, and is easily digested. Just now we are importing soy beans from Japan and China. We shall probably continue to import our principal supply from that source after the war is over, because of the lower cost of production in Asia unless there shall be established a protective tariff which will encourage the American farmer to produce this valuable agricultural product.

The powder and dynamite plant at Patterson, Okla, 18 miles east of McAlester, Ogla., was blown up at noon Thursday of last week and, acording to meager messages, there has been heavy loss of life. The operator of the Missouri, Kansas and Texas Railroad at Patterson wired that the town had been wiped out. He feared the loss of life would be great, he said. The explosion rocked the mining town of Bokoshe, 18 miles west of Fort Smith. At Crowder, west of Fort Smith, every plate-glass window was broken.

THE FOOD OF FOOLS

The Department of Commerce coolly announces that during the past fiscal year it issued 1,192 daily, weekly, monthly, quarterly, annual, and special reports "covering the broad scope of work of the Secretary's Office." The printing of these reports cost the Government $316,000. But does Mr. Redfield take into consideration the cost to the Government of the clerical work in preparing these reports, the tremendous outlay for paper, the cost of handling through the mails, and other charges? Almost daily a bulletin emanates from the Department of Commerce destined for papers all over the country, and then a reprint of it shows up in the Daily Commerce Report. "The broad scope" of the Redfield office takes in everything from Democratic political propaganda to acting as agent for foreign manufacturers who wish to unload in our markets, all printed and disseminated at the taxpayers' expense.

Nor is Mr. Redfield alone in this offending. The Government literature prepared and distributed at public expense by the political paranoiacs of this administration is of a quantity and quality to horrify the country. Almost every chief of bureau has his publicity agent. Reports overlap, reiterate, go far afield. There is no coordination. The Children's Bureau gets out a voluminous document on foreign pension provisions, for instance, while another bureau issues instructions on the care of infants. The Official Bulletin gets $1,350,000 to tell what the Government is doing in the war and regales the public with articles on woman suffrage and Democratic laudation. The entire Washington bureaucracy seems to have resolved itself into a mutual admiration society and reserving Democrats are cloyed with the honey of adulation. By proper coordination and the suppression of politics and piffle the cost to the Government of distributing practical knowledge could be reduced 90 per cent and a healthy example in economy would be voted. Meanwhile print paper grows scarcer and wastebaskets groan.

(Christian Endeavor Day) Christian Endeavor Week will be observed beginning this Sunday, January 27th, all over the world, and end Sunday February 1st.

The object of C. E. week is to recall the history of the Christian Endeavor Movement, to give thanks to God for his gracious leading and to acknowledge and praise him in our achievement. It is also designed to head up the activities of fall and winter in definite decisions for fuller consecration and more wholehearted service.

Miss Grace Devilbiss has charge of a school near Dennings. This seems to be a winter of changing teacher.

Howard Hymiller and wife who spent several weeks at John E. Heck's returned to their home last week.

W. F. Romspert and wife entertained the Social Club Saturday evening.

Samuel G. Fair has sold their farm situated a mile south of Uniontown, to Mr. Hull, of Pennsylvania, who takes possession this spring.

We suppose there will be the usual amount of changing properties in the neighborhood.

Elder W. P. Englar spent Monday at the Aged People's home at San-Mar.

This continued sold spell is causing the coal pile to dwindle considerably.

IN MEMORIAM

In sad, but loving remembrance of my dear wife, Maggie L. F. Barnes, who died three years ago today January 21, 1915.

Her memory is as dear today,
As in the hour she passed away
We did our best, God only knew
To save her life, we could not do.

Rest, dear wife, thy work is done,
Thy willing hands will toil no more,
A faithful wife, so true and kind,
A better, mother, you could not find.

We do not know the pain she bore,
As we sat and watched her die,
But we only know she slipped away
With out bidding us good bye.

By her husband,
JAMES A. BARNES.

HER DESCRIPTION WAS LUCID

It Was Funny Hardware Clerk Couldn't Think Sooner What She Wanted, but Couldn't Name.

She stood before the hardware counter in the department store and her eye had a wandering look. It took in at a glance the various things displayed on the counter and then it wandered to the shelves.

"What can I show you?" asked the girl behind the counter.

"That's what I am trying to think of. I meant to write the name down before I left home, but I didn't, and I can't remember. Anyhow, it's one of these little doodads that are three of four things in one, you know. A kind of a thingum-a-jig that part of it folds up and—don't you know what I mean? One of these little jiggers that you are sure to find in every kitchen table drawer, or ought to find there, for they come in handy in so many ways and you—a funny little contraption that you can do as much with as you can with a hairpin. It's a combination thingum-bob—and don't you know what I mean? It is funny you don't get the idea of it. Being in a store where you are probably selling them every day. I should think you would know right off what I mean. It's the commonest sort of a little rinktum, a combination affair that you open cans and pull out corks with and—"

"You mean a combination corkscrew?"

"That's it! I knew I would remember the name of the little jigger, if I put my mind to it. Thank you. Yes, I am sure it is —a—a what do you call it? That's it! That's it! The very identical little squiggledom I was looking for. Funny you didn't remember the name of it sooner."

TO WRITE ON MOVING TRAIN

Railroad Conductor, Who Knows the Trick of It, Holds Elbow Firmly Against His Side.

Writing legibly on a fast moving train is difficult to a person unaccustomed to it. The railroad conductor knows the trick of it and manages to get along quite satisfactorily. He prefers to write in a standing position and holds his right elbow firmly against his side. The reason for this is that in a sitting posture there is too much lateral movement in the trunk of the body, while in a standing position this is more easily controlled.

When the arm swings freely, as in ordinary writing, several joints of the body are affected in the process, each of which is capable of its own motion. Holding the elbow against one's ribs "breaks" these motion tendencies, except that of the wrist, which movement is necessary in writing, and thus the pencil or pen is more easily controlled.

Blindness No Bar to Marriage.

The statistics as to age at which sight is lost bring out some interesting facts concerning the extent to which marriage takes place among the blind. The majority of those who have not married before they lost their sight continue single for the remainder of their lives. But the fact that the percentage single is higher among the females who lost their sight before the age of twenty than it is among the males indicates that blindness is less of a bar to marriage in the case of males than of females, since, all other things being equal, the percentage should have been somewhat lower for females by reason of the fact that women ordinarily marry earlier than men. The figures show, however, that while marriage is much less frequent among the blind than among those who can see, it is by no means rare; of the males who had lost their sight between the ages of fifteen and nineteen, for example, about one-third, and of the females, about one-fifth, had married since they became blind.

Most Fragrant Wild Flower.

Readers of the American botanist have been trying to decide which is the most fragrant American wild flower and their opinions on the subject exhibit remarkable diversity. In New England the majority give first choice to the pink azalea, with the white water lily second. There are many votes for the trailing arbutus, but, as the editor suggests, its fragrance is doubtless overestimated, owing to the fact that it is the earliest fragrant wild flower of spring. Other candidates for first place are the partridge berry, the common locust, horned bladderwort (of which John Burroughs says: "In a warm, moist atmosphere the odor is almost too strong"), yellow jessamine, spotted wintergreen, and some of the magnolias. The same journal is collecting opinions as to which wild flower is the most beautiful.—Scientific American.
