SIDE ONE

1428. Chestnut St
Wednesday afternoon

My dear Mary,

At last, little Robert's Afghan is finished and I take advantage of Mrs Chester's kindness to send it to you, though I do not suppose he will need it just now, we have had cool weather, but this afternoon, it is quite warm again. There is a delightful breeze blowing in the south windows of the dining room, however, as I write, and it does look sweetly, in the evening sun, through the gardens, "a peep at the country" as I call it. We shall miss Mr & Mrs Chester very much, and I wish they could stay longer. We expect you and looks a great deal better. He seems quite pleased with the prospect of a new sister. Sister never speaks of it himself, but takes all their banterings in good part, but in the gravest manner. His tea-time, so I must stop, with much love to dear Cousin Anne, Harry and the dear children. I am so rejoiced dear Cornelia escaped any serious injury from her fall. Tell Cousin Anne not to hurry home, for I have a kind of presentiment, that though the D is very much pressed now, he may run down to Indy check after a while, if the is still there. Though very very tired at times, he seems tolerably well, though thin.

Affectionately Your's
Emily H
