Another reason for that sour expression on the newspaper writer's face is seen when the typesetter for the 57th time turns "morale" into "morals."

RED CROSS NEWS

A Red Cross House soon will be constructed in each of the Army and Navy Training Camps.

It is intended primarily to be a lounge and rest haven for convalescent soldiers. It will also be an administration center for the Field Director of the Red Cross, an emergency lodging for summoned relatives of those "dookies" dangerously ill, and for Red Cross nurses and staffs.

A new headquarters for all Red Cross activities in the camp hospital will be provided by the Red Cross House, and it will serve also to develop to full efficiency the Red Cross Communication Service, through which families and friends of soldiers can obtain prompt, accurate, and detailed information as to their welfare. This service covers the camps in America as well as the battle-front.

One of the first of these structures to be built will be at Camp Meade, for which bids soon will be opened at the office of the Dept. of Military Relief of the American Red Cross. Construction work in all the other camps and cantonments will be rushed.

For convalescents, many new comforts will be provided by the Red Cross House. These will include a solarium, or "sun parlor," a glassed-in porch, and a stage, upon which "movies" and other entertainments can be given. A billiard room, kitchen, reading, reception and committee room, in addition to a large assembly hall, also will be located on the first floor. The second floor will be given over entirely to bed rooms. Each building will be 100x100 feet.

WRITE TO THE BOYS IN THE TRENCHES

General Pershing himself wants every father, mother and other relatives or close friend of a boy now in the trenches, or of a boy who is likely to be there soon, to write him letters and to send him newspapers. The commander wants it shown that the boys are held in remembrance at home, for the home touch makes a good soldier. "One of the most effective ways whereby our army thousands of miles away in a foreign land can keep in sympathy with the great home sentiment of America is through individual letters received by officers and men from relatives and intimate friends," said General Pershing. "In just the same way letters from our fighting men here should fire the nation with enthusiasm to win and a determination to endure many burdens which are trivial compared to the sacrifice the soldiers are making." Thus from the commander-in-chief comes the assurance that there is no foundation for the apparent belief of some postal clerks that they should discourage folks at home from writing letters in order to save shipping space. Shipping is precious, but the morale and happiness of the American soldier are still more precious especially since he has become a fighting man. Surely nothing can go so far to make a soldier forget mud, dampness and cold of the trenches—even bullets and shells—as a good letter from the United States.

Ice conditions in the Susquehanna River at Lapidum, near Havre de Grace, practically remain unchanged, and at present there is little or no danger of the ice doing much damage at Safe Harbor. About six miles above McCalls Ferry the ice has formed a gorge eight or nine feet high and is coming down stream. William V. Spencer at Lapidum, near the tidewater canal, says the ice has piled up there in a gorge 10 feet high, and that some of the floating cakes which drifted on the wharf at Lapidum were 25 inches thick. Mr. Spencer and other residents along the water front say that at present they believe the ice will pass out into the bay without doing any damage. Saturday the ice below the Pennsylvania Railroad bridge at Havre de Grace broke up, and passed out without doing any damage. The river was falling rapidly Saturday night. On account of the shortage of coal quite a number of people were out along the river shore Saturday catching drift wood.

The generals commanding the various districts in France where American troops are stationed have received instructions to take immediate and vigorous action against profiteering and price-raising, and to prosecute under the anti-speculation law of April, 1916, anyone suspected of increasing prices of commodities to the newcomers. Further to protect the Americans, it is ordered that each municipality post publicly in French and English the normal price list of all ordinary food commodities, so that Americans will know what they may expect to have to pay, and thus be able to protect themselves against extortion.

Brig. Gen. Frederick W. Sibley, who died Monday at Rockford, Ill., was an old Indian fighter. He was afterward actively engaged in the Spanish-American War, and only a little more than a year ago led a punitive expedition into Mexico. No man in the United States Army had a higher reputation as a fighter than General Sibley. He won his spurs as an Indian fighter during his early days along the frontier, and the reputation he made then was in no way lessened by his campaign during the Spanish-American War. Born in Texas October 17, 1852, a son of the late Col. Caleb C. Sibley, U. S. A., General Sibley was appointed to the Military Academy from Georgia in 1869. General Sibley won a first lieutenancy for his bravery during the Indian campaign. He was ordered to take 25 men and scout through the Sioux country until he located the main village of the warring Indians. The expedition was successful, but did not come on the Indians until it was so deep in the hills that a fight was necessary before return to the main body of troops could be effected. When the youthful leader discovered the exact situation he made a brief address to his men, in which he admonished them to fight together to the end. If they could beat off their redskin foe, all well and good; if they were in for defeat, then he declared they would fight it out until the last man was dead. They came through the fight with only a few wounded, and those they carried to safety with them. On his return to the United States from the Philippines General Sibley was stationed for a time in the West and then, having been made a lieutenant colonel, was ordered East and made commandant of the Military Academy at West Point.
