FARMERS' COMBINATIONS.

It does not escape attention that farmers are taking much more kindly to the idea of combination than they did a few years ago. It was not long in the past that you could with great difficulty get farmers into co-operative schemes of marketing, etc. They were afraid some one would get too big a salary or prove dishonest or incapable.

As an illustration of the greater friendliness of the farmer to co-opeation, a dispatch from Lancaster, Penna., was interesting. It told how the tobacco growers of that county have just held the largest meeting of their history, and have organized a stock company to buy, pack, and sell the tobacco of the county. Twelve hundred growers got together and quickly subscribed $50,000. That could not have happened ten years ago.

The general public looks on such movements with some suspicion. It regards them as probably movements to get higher prices. At this meeting it was noted that all the growers were anxious to learn how they could get higher figures for their product.

But that end of the proposition will take care of itself. There will always be competition in raising farm products. No combination of growers can keep prices up artificially. The main thing is that the farmers shall get the idea of co-operating in efforts to do things on large and standardized scales. That must inevitably tend to reduce costs and prove of benefit both to producers and consumers.

Even if these tobacco growers do get bigger prices for their product, it is doubtful if it comes out of the consumer. Their selling association will tend to sell direct to agencies close to retail distribution, which should cut out much of the costs of the middlemen.

CABINET OFFICIALS SAVE SONS AT FRONT.

Washington, Feb. 27—Representative Royal C. Johnson, of South Dakota, who enlisted as a private in January, 1918, and earned a first lieutenancy on the battlefields of France, compares the heads of the present Democratic administration to the royal family of Germany in that they have never permitted their sons to get hurt on the firing line.

"I regret," said Johnson in a speech to his colleagues in the House "that it is impossible to get anything from this administration for the doughboy because no son or relative of anyone intimately connected with it was allowed to fight. Facts are facts and you might as well meet them, and it is a shame that these clean-cut American boys were prevented by their fathers or mothers and the administration here at Washington from getting into battle as they would have preferred o do. It is an outrage that they were not permitted to make the same record that the rest of the boys of the country could make.

"One of the Cabinet memebrs who has been very prolific in his statements that the world must be made safe for democracy allowed his son to chase submarines on Chesapeake Bay. Finally on September 3, he landed at Bordeaux, France, and was sent to a town forty miles from there for training. I know this boy and he is a real boy and wanted to get in and fight, but would they let him? I should say not. Within a week after his arrival there the great colonel of the American Expeditionary Forces, Colonel House, wired for him to come to Paris, and, after a short trip to Germany to secure souvenirs, he is now carefully guarding the person of the Colonel from any intrusion.

"Another bright and capable son of a Cabinet member has been retained in this country and not even allowed to put to sea. I knew of that young man and know that he would be a fighting man if he had the chance. His father or mother or the administration were careful to see that he was never taken on a destroyer or allowed to get in danger.

"Yes, to be fair, I will say that there is one exception in the son-in-law of our President, who enlisted in the Y. M. C. A., and if I remember correctly was somewhere in France for a week or two, and the newspapers report that a shell fell within a few yards of him, greatly jeopardizing his future career.

"How foolish to expect that this administration would do anything for the doughboy except to preach to him! Why, they would not even allow Ollie Newman, one of the bravest young men who ever wore the uniform a former commissioner of the District of Columbia to get within smell of powder. They sent him as an official chaperon of the President's daughter when she went abroad to sing for the doughboys. When she began singing and the poor kids were lined up, all tired out from the work of the day and forced to attend the service, just like in the nursery story of the old lady and her pig, the general would tell the Major, the Major would tell the Captain, and the poor Captain would be forced to line up one-half of the company and march them over for the singing festivities.

"There surely were some rough spots in this war for the poor American doughboy and he will never forget it. It is easy for me to understand the lack of interest on the part of this administration in him because not one relative connected with it has ever been allowed to become one."

FORCING HOUSTON'S ACE

Washington, Feb. 25—(Special correspondence)— Not all the clever work is accomplished by the men higher up. Never was this truer than in the case of a subordinate in the Department of Agriculture who forced the Secretary by means of strategy, to give out information wanted by the livestock men of the country, which he did not want to give. The subordinate's name is Dr. W. J. Spillman, former chief of the office of Farm Management and the Secretary to Secretary Houston. The details surrounding this interesting incident have just been made public by Dr. Spillman in an address before the annual conference of the National Board of Farm Organizations.

In order to fully appreciate the incident it should be stated that the majority of the work of Dr. Spillman's office had been stopped by a letter from Secretary Houston and that 13 letters of authorization requested by Spillman to enable certain parts of the work to continue had been refused.

The story as told in Dr. Spillman's own words is as follows:

"I immediately resolved to leave the department so as to be in position to force the Secretary to change his mind about this work, as well as other work of the office of Farm Management which he had discouraged from the first. It was not until June following that I was able to complete these arrangements. Meanwhile, early in January, 1918, Mr. E. C. Lasater came to my office and inquired as to the progress of the cost of production studies. I told him the situation and he suggested that if I would wait a little he could render some assisance. I told him his help would be welcome.

"About the middle of January, 1918, the Secretary received a telegram from Mr. Ike Pryor, president of the American National Livestock Association, reading substantially as follows: The America Nat. Livestock Assoc., in session at Salt Lake City, would like to know the status of the investigations on cost of producing beef being conducted by your office of Farm Management. Please wire reply in time for me to read it to this convention before it adjourns tomorrow at 4.30.' This telegram was sent to me to prepare a reply for the Secretary's signature. I prepared substantially the following: 'The investigations on cost of production referred to in your telegram have been greatly extended and are being pushed vigorously. A report on them will be ready by the first of July.'

"About ten minutes after I sent this to the Secretary's office." Dr. Spillman continued, "Mr. Harrison, Secretary to Secretary Houston, called me over the phone and said: as nearly as I can remember: 'Spillman, what in the hell do you mean by sending a telegram like this over here for the Secretary to sign? You know damned well he has ordered all those investigations stopped.' 'Yes,' I replied, 'I know he has ordered them stopped, but I have a suspicion he is going to order them started again.' 'What do you mean by that?' responded the astounded Mr. Harrison. 'I mean just what the words imply.' was my rejoinder. 'But the telegram isn't true,' insisted Harrison. 'It will be true when the Secretary has signed it,' I replied. 'But he won't sign it,' said Harrison. I said I though the would, and asked Mr. Harrison if he know who Ike Pryor is. All I knew,' responded he, 'is that he is signed here as president of this association.' 'Yes' said I, 'and that is one of the largest and livest bunches of men in the country, and I happen to know that they know what they are after. Please tell the Secretary for me that if he values his job he will sign that telegram."

"A few minutes later I received a courteous note from Mr. Harrison, with a copy of the telegram, which he said the Secretary had signed and sent. The next day I renewed my request for the 13 letters of authorization, and after some wrangling obtained them."

"I'll pay my bills so you can pay yours", is the motto for Pay Up Week yours", is he motto for Pay Up Week. The principle of some people in Westminster is, "I'll forget my bills so the merchants willl have to charge me for their interest costs".

Naturally the Bolsheviks don't think much of a country where you are supposed to take a bath at least once a week.
