ANOTHER CABINET CRISIS BREWING IN WILSON CIRCLES

Repudiation of Secretary Redfield's Price Fixing Policy Starts Row

ADMINISTRATION EMBARRASSED

Washington, May 29—The amouldering controversy over steel and iron prices between Secretary of Commerce Redfield and the industrial board, on the one hand, and Director General Hines of the railroad administration, on the other, has flared up again.

Efforts of Mr. Redfield and the industrial board to force the director general to agree to steel prices as fixed in a conference between government officials and steel men some weeks ago have failed. Mr. Hines has just announced that the railroad administration will ask at once for competitive bids for 200,000 tons of steel rails.

This means complete disregard of Secretary Redfield and the industrial board. Not only that but Mr. Hines has issued a statement throwing bricks at the industrial, which is under Mr. Redfield. And Mr. Redfield in a statement indicates he has not retreated but is standing to his guns. Of interest, too, is the fact the navy s buying steel without reference to Mr. Redfield's organization The days of the industrial board are, of course, numbered.

The White House has left Secretary Redfield to fight out his own troubles and tribulations. This implies that the President refuses to back up Mr. Redfield and trusts the judgment of Mr. Hines.

Admittedly, Secretaray Redfield is thus left in a highly embarrassing situation. Gossip that he will qu the Cabinet or be forced out in rife. What is more, his situation is in some respects akin to that of Postmaster General Burleson in that certain elements close to the administration would like to pry him loose. It is said the President would like to replace Mr. Redfield with a functionary more useful to the party purposes of 1920. But all hints, intimations and the like to Mr. Redfield that a long vacation would be good for him after his arduous war work have been in vain. On the principle of self-determination, how can a Cabinet official be rudely kicked out? Also, Cabinet upheavals do not look well on the eve of a presidential campaign.

Thus much for the personal and political phases of the embroglio. But there are other important angles of it which more deeply concern the public. While the rumpus rages between Messrs. Radfield and Hines, steel and iron prices remain unsettled and what this means to the the farmers and all other consumers of material need only be mentioned.

Without regard to where the prices of steel and iron ought to go, the fact remains that Secretary Redfield and the industrial board, asleep to the fact the war is over, set out to fix prices for the public—not simply for the government, but for the public. That fact stands out and cannot be overlooked. They had no authority from Congress that remotely contemplated any such proceeding and Congress will not grant them any such authority. The whole buiness, as many in Congress have already said, is a sample of the disposition of government officials to reach out and assume authority which they do not have. Moreover, what about the observance by officials of the anti-trust laws? If Congress get to asking questions on this score, the embarrassments of Mr. Redfield will still further be accentuated.

THE SALVATION ARMY'S FUTURE

The good support which has been given the Salvation Army in its campaign for funds, marks the warm place this organization has acquired in the hearts of the public. Most people can remember when the lads and lassies were regarded as mere cranks. Conservative folks scoffed at the sometimes discordant music of their drums and cornets and tambourines.

Newspaper reporters assigned to cover their meetings used sometimes to remark scornfully that they found no one there but the very drogs of humanity. Yet that was just the class the Army wanted to get hold of. They can not be touched by the ordinary methods of church work. If they could be aroused from their despair and apathy by a little drum beating and cornet tooting, that style of music was serving a purpose that the most highly paid choir would not be able to accomplish.

The Salvation Army won the entire respect of the soldiers by the devotion with which they faced the horrors of the trenches. They were fearless of danger and they never thought of fatigue. Having shown this splendid stuff that is in them, the Army should be given warmer support than it has ever had before in its efforts in this country.

The Army's noble work of relief, feeding the hungry, clothing the naked, finding work for unemployed, is familiar in all large centers of population. But it has had to beg for small coins from door to door. Its work for relief of poverty has been hampered by very limited means.

It should have substantial buildings in all towns having a submerged class of people, and a sufficient regular support so that it can carry on its work for discouraged and despairing people for whom it has a special appeal. It has proved its sincerity and business capacity so nobly, that it can well be trusted with a very generous money support.

THINK PROHIBITION IS NEAR AT HAND

Wilson Has Dashed Hopes of Liquor People.

Little comfort is derived by brewers and winesellers from the recommendation of President Wilson to Congress, that the wartime prohibition act be so amended as to permit the sale of wine and beer after July 1. It was hoped that the President would proclaim that demobilization had terminated and, under the authority vested in him by the act, abrogate the law. He has seen fit, however, to make permissible only the sale of wine and beer and, as this would necessitate an amendment to the existing law, Congress must take action in the matter.

It is generally conceded that the new Congress is drier even than that which has just gone out of existence and hence little may be expected from that source. If the desired legislation is proposed it must be enacted within six weeks if relief is to be furnished, as the country, under the law now in force, becomes dry on July 1. It is understood that the chairman of the House Judiciary Committee, to which the bill would be referred, is opposed to it and he, with a majority of his committee, could hold it up.

Little Hope for Relief

Even if it could be forced through the House, the bill would strike a snag in the Senate, in which the drys have a big majority and the President's influence is nil. In any event whiskey and kindred liquors are doomed because of the President's stand and wines cannot be excepted unless Congress says so.

Beer, however, still hangs on the ragged edge, and by reason of a decision recently rendered by Judge Hand, in the United States District Court for New York, stands a ghost of a chance. It was contended by counsel for the United States Brewers' Association that the law applied only to beer that was intoxicating and that that which contained only 2-3|4 per cent. alcohol could not be so considered. It was to prevent the manufacture of such beer that suit was instituted.

For Jury To Decide.

The government attorney maintained that even if not intoxicating the law prohibited its manufacture and sale for beverage purposes. Judge Hand, however, overruled this contention, holding the language of the act could be construed only as applying to intoxicants and unless it could be shown that beer containing 2-3|4 per cent. of alcohol was intoxicating, its manufacture and sale could not be prohibited.

This ended the first contention which resulted in a victory for the brewers. It is now up to the government to prove such beer an intoxicant and when the case comes up again this momentous question must be determined by a jury.

No one can say how a jury may decide. It is the prevailing opinion that if left to 12 men, good and true, in a wet city the brewers will win out, but if referred to a jury in a community controlled by the Antisaloon League the drys would score. And there you are.

Mr. Anderson's Views

William H. Anderson, superintendent of the Antisaloon League Branch in New York, and who formerly had charge of its Maryland affairs, Sunday made the following statement:

"The wets were unable to keep from telling, after the return of Samuel Gompers, that some assurance had been given.

"The Republican party was conceived in protest against a great evil. It has upheld the Constitution. It has prospered in proportion as it has been responsive to the moral sentiment of the people. We shall be very much surprised if it permits the President to put it in the hole on this question."

Mr. Aviator: When you pass over Westminster don't think you must drop your beer bottles, monkey wrenches, etc., from 10,000 feet up, in order to attract attention among the people passing on Westminster street.

The people who talked about the foolhardiness of the aviators who have been flying across the ocean, are perhaps the descendants of those who blamed Columbus for his rash act in sailing an unknown sea.

Under bolshevism the bosses must not expect that they can get as much pay as the people that work for them.
