HUSBAND AND WIFE USE TONALL FOR INDIGESTION

"I saw the advertisement in the papers about Tonall and as my wife and I both suffered from indigestion, we began using it," says Harvey Umstead of Fleetwood, Pa.

"We have both received great benefits and do cheerfully recommend Tonall to all persons afflicted with indigestion or stomach troubles. This medicine does all that is claimed for it. No other is equal to it. Everyone speaks highly of it. It is worth all and more than it costs a bottle, in the way of restored health."

This testimonial was given March 1, 1919.

Tonall is sold at Chas. W. Moore's, drug store, Westminster and McKinney's, Taneytown.

LEADERS MUST SET EXAMPLE.

Washington, July 2.—The Republican Publicity Association, through its President, Hon. Jonathan Bourne, Jr., today gave out the following statement from its Washington Headquarters:

"If we are to demand and expect law and order among the masses of the American people—among the less intelligent and least informed—we must demand and secure observance of law and order in both letter and spirit among people 'higher up', esspecially among those in official position. If we are to have respect for government among the masses, we must have respect for government among those who are specially charged with administration of the law. Those who would teach loyalty to American institutions must themselves set an example in loyalty by strict adherence to the fundamentals of our republican form of government.

"These are general observations, but they have specific application to conditions and problems now confronting the American people. There is abroad in the land a spirit of bolshevism, which, though manifested by a small minority, is now for the first time a menace to our institutions. The exhibition of that spirit in the bombing outrages is the least of its evils. Its more menacing aspects are seen in the underlying disposition to ignore and evade law, to defy legal requirements and to set up individual will against duly constituted authority.

"And it is not surprising that such a tendency should be prevalent. We have had far too frequently in the past six years exhibitions of substitution of individual will for orderly and lawful procedure. One of the earliest instances came during the special session of Congress following the inauguration of the Democratic administration. Congress was then revising the tariff laws and many men connected with productive American enterprise came personally or sent their representatives to protest to Congress against legislation destructive of American industry. Can it be that the proposal to 'hang them higher than Haman' was the initiation of a policy of violence from which the nation suffers today? What choice is there between hanging and bombing? Is one a greater crime than the other, and, if so, why?

"The American people have not forgotten the occasion on which certain organizations having control of trains made demands for immediate increase in wages, threatening as an alternative the cessation of transportation with resultant halting of industry, destruction of business, scarcity of food in cities, suffering from want, and, probably, loss of life. This demand had support and co-operation from men in position of high authority. With what consistency can those men now denounce the bolshevist whose threat of force takes a somewhat different form though less formidable and fearful in its consequences?

"We have seen in more recent times a seizure of the cables and the wires on the pretext of war necessity—a pretext which has no corroboration convincing to the minds of the American people. So far as yet appears, that seizure resulted in no good to the country, no promotion of the war, no improvement of service. To all appearances it was an exhibition of a disposition to exercise power for the enforcement of personal views on operation of public utilities. It was subversion of the spirit of the law. How can the men who thus deal in their own individual way with other private property of still other proprietors?

"Instances of this kind might be multiplied but these are sufficient to illustrate the principle herein set forth that those who would effectively preach respect for law and order must themselves practice it."

G. O. P. COMING CLEAN.

Washington, July 2.—The Republican Publicity Association, through its President, Hon. Jonathan Bourne, Jr., today gave out the following statement from its Washington Headquarters:

"The two principal issues on which the Republican party returned to power in Congress as a result of the elections last November were the promises of its leaders to return our government to the people and strip the autocrats at Washington of the unheard of authority that had been conferred upon them by the Democratic Senate and House, and to effect immediately a drastic reduction in the enormous expenditures that have been made under the guise of war necessity. The record of the two Houses thus far demonstrates that the confidence of the voters was well placed.

"Perhaps the most important of the democratic measures that have received attention is that restoring the telephones and telegraphs to their rightful owners. A Senate committee reported a bill early in the session designed to that end, and it has since passed and is now awaiting action in the House. Meanwhile the Members of the latter body have been holding hearings on the subject so as to fully inform themselves for intelligent action without delay.

"The bill introduced by Senator Jones of Washington, Chairman of the Commerce Committee, to permit shipyards to construct vessels for foreign account without first getting permission from the Shipping Board is another measure that restores freedom to private enterprises. In the past few months many shipyards, particularly on the Pacific Coast, have been practically idle, necessitating the laying off of thousands of skilled workmen, while contracts from foreign nations were waiting. The reason was that the President had decreed that his agency, the Shipping Board, should not permit our yards to accept foreign orders. Under the Jones bill executive interference in the matter is removed, and private initiative left unhampered.

"The Cummins bill, restoring the rate-making power to the Interstate Commerce Commission, is another step towards divesting the autocrats of the Administration of their war powers. For years the Commission had jurisdiction over interstate rates, but it was suddenly taken from them and bestowed upon the Director General of Railroads when the rails were Federalized. Senator Cummins' measure puts the whole question back under the control of the experts who have handled it so long.

"The Knox resolution aimed to secure the separation of the league of nations from the peace treaty is a distinct step in preserving to the people what is rightfully theirs. It protests against the President usurping the right of the people to amend their own Constitution, and declares that the Senate cannot, under their oaths, and will not ratify a treaty that undertakes to amend the Constitution in defiance of the means provided in that instrument for amendment.

"To the women of the country the passage of the suffrage amendment is perhaps the most important act of the Congress thus far. Rejected by the Democrats of the last Congress the Republicans did not lose a moment in putting it through the present session, thus paving the way for the enfranchisement of millions of our most intelligent citizens.

"Hundreds of millions of dollars have been pared from the estimates submitted with each appropriation bill, notably the army and navy supply bills, and more economies are to follow. Measures giving the people the benefit of the huge surplus of food and materials held by the Army are now under consideration, and scores of other bills await action in the passage of which the public will directly benefit. Truly the Republican party is exemplifying its life-long record of achievements in conformity with pre-election promises.

WORK OF A FORMER WESTMINSTER GIRL AND STUDENT OF W. M. COLLEGE

Students Under Leadership of Miss Ogg Present "Mid Summer Night's Dream" in Splendid Manner.

A Midsummer Night's Dream given last evening by the Senior class of the Normal school, under the direction of Miss Florence Bell Ogg, head of the English department delighted a large and enthusiastic audience. The orchard, with its gentle slopes, provided a natural amphitheatre which not only afforded seating capacity for the hundreds of visitors but furnished an ideal stage for this sylvan drama. The carpet of grass, the back drop of vines and laurel, and the growing trees which formed the back ground of the entire setting, would be impossible of reproduction by the most skillful artist. The very atmosphere put one into a re mood for the coming of the fairies; the pranks of claws, and the love-making of the ardent Atheneans.

The costuming, always difficult in an amateur performance, was excellent, and it was a surprise to see what handsome men, as well as lovely maidens, the Normal can produce. The ease which each member of the cast seemed to feel, the lack of waits between the scenes and the smoothness of the entire production compel a hearty recognition of the time and skill expended in the preparation. On no professional stage would one see a greater lack of self-consciousness. Individually the parts seemed especially well cast. The players looked, as well as acted their parts. Their voices were clear, their enunciation excellent, and their spirit quite wonderful.

The fairies, attendants to their queen, the fair Zibania, were graceful and altogether charming. So spontaneous was the lovemaking of the awakened Zibania that the audience burst into delighted applause. Hermia and Helen were both so lovely that even if one had not known of the love charm the variation of Lysander and Demetrius would have been entirely understandable.

Puck, one of the most difficult roles, was admirably done and Oberan was a most convincing fairy king.

Bottom, the weaver, the clown, the actor, the producer, and briefly the beloved of Zibania, was cleverly and artistically portrayed by Lena Maud Padgett. She was a success from the moment of her first appearance. Indeed the entire play was most satisfactory in its interpretations and portrayal.

AFTERWARDS

Now, that my sailing days are o'er.
And I've passed beyond the door,
My thoughts will often wonder
To those trying days of yore,
When we wrestled with the billows,
And without we could not see
How the "Georgia" labored onward,
Ever onward across the dark blue sea.

The faces of our shipmates
We'll always bear in mind;
We'd scarce forget the Skipper,
The Band no one could find.
And when it came to playing
We were always on the job.
For if we stopped a minute,
It was, "Get the mop and swab".

"Never again" is the Sailor's cry
And deep in his soul he means it all,
But after the months have drifted by
He leans again to the sea's wild call.
He soon forgets the Navy Band;
Tempest-tossed and "Lend a hand",
His dreams sweep back to the rolling tide
And a life on the sea again.

So as I leave my sailing days
A "bawling out "and a ship behind,
'They all look good when far away"
And this is all that I will say.
But if you chance to cross the sea,
Just once think of me,
Not as a passenger-oh no-not yet,
But sailing for humanity.
