My dear Emily,

I suppose the weather has prevented your calling to see me today; and I cannot tell you how sorry I am to part from you - I shall be truly glad to receive a letter from you, when you get back to New York, & I hope you will find your Uncle and all your friends well -

I send you the obituary notices of some dearly beloved friends, who now, I trust, are united together in a happier world than this; and where, I hope, we may all, through adorable mercy, be permitted to join them; having "washed our robes and made them white
