MONSTER BRITISH AIRSHIP COMING TO U. S.

The Monster British Airship R-35, even larger than the R-34, which was the first Airship to cross the Atlantic, will be brought to the United States about May, 1920.

Word was received at the Navy Recruiting Station, 125 E. Baltimore St., Baltimore, Tuesday that a navy crew of 38 experienced men would be sent to England to bring back the R-38. The crew of the R-38 will be divided into two parties; the first party to leave the United States March first. Every person included in this crew is expected to be of the very highest type that can be obtained. The following will be included in the crew:

18 Gas Engine Mechanics.

12 Riggers, familiar with fabric and wire splicing.

6 Coxswains and 2 Radio Operators.

Considerable interest is being shown in the Navy in the R-38, which is being purchased as a starter in the development of "Lighter than Air Craft" in the U. S. Navy. The R-38 is the last word in airships and is larger than any of the "German Zeppelins".

THE INFLUENZA SITUATION

How many cases of so called "FLU" are in Westminster and vicinity I do not know, as they have not all been reported but I am sure that it is not nearly so prevalent as in the epidemic of 1918-1919 and that it is generally much milder, resembling Grip. However the disease is not to be considered lightly and every precaution is to be observed on part of the patient to avoid contact with other people and go to bed.

The Schools will not be closed.

Nurses, trained, practical and volunteer, will please report their names and addresses.

FOR FLETCHER'S
CASTORIA

Renewing his charges of an enormous waste of print paper by executive departments of the federal government, Senator Smoot, Republican, of Utah, told the Senate yesterday that from July 1, 1916, to July 15, 30,144,362 copies of speeches made by cabinet officials and other persons were printed and distributed through the mails at a total cost of $442,000. Senator Smoot said this not only was a waste of paper, but an "abuse of the public's money" and a "wicked practice" that should be stopped immediately in view of the serious print paper situation.

A revival of the dancing craze is predicted. It is suspected that the teachers of dancing, who have looked rather hungry of late, are not hostile to the idea.

Lady Bountiful

By JESSIE E. SHERWIN

(Copyright, 1919, by the Western Newspaper Union.)

It was a matter of no small wonderment when, after a mysterious absence from his accustomed haunts, Derby Dan reappeared attired respectably and with money to treat his friends royally.

"Left a legacy?" "Struck a new lay?" "Found a pocketbook?" and like expressions hailed Dan, but he only smiled wisely and, as his money finally gave out, ceased to be an object of comment and interest to all except Baldy Moss, who was his chosen chum in famine and plenty alike, and one day Dan confided his secret to Baldy.

"Tell you, partner," he recited, "I struck a queer snap. A young fellow made a bargain with me at three dollars a day to keep sober, report at his room every evening from seven to nine and answer his questions?"

"About what?" propounded Baldy skeptically.

"Oh, how we fellows of the tomato can and the rope belt live. Human interest information, was the way he put it. I told him all I knew. One day he says: 'I guess we will cancel the engagement, Dan, I must confess to being disappointed in you. It's the pathetic and pitiful, the real struggles and misery of the poor and unfortunate I have been looking for.'"

"Why, whatever was he after."

"He's a story writer, or tries or hopes to be. He was looking for real experience and characters."

"I see, I see," nodded Baldy musingly. "Say, Dan, if ever we run across him point him out, will you?"

It was about a week after that when Dan suddenly seized Baldy's arm and pointed to a young man crossing the street.

"That's him," he spoke quickly.

"Leave the rest to me," directed Baldy, and put off on the trail of Merrill Hoyt with the hail: "Mister, can I have a word with you?"

"Certainly," nodded Merrill.

"I heard you're one of those guys who write for the papers," projected Baldy. "I guess, too, that you want to dig under the surface and get a thriller with lots of pep in it, hey?"

"You seem to have surmised what I'm trying to find," answered Merrill with a whimsical smile.

"Well, I ain't much up in litatoor, but I suppose you are after heroes and sheros. I know one good and beautiful as an angel. She came to the tenement where I used to live before my wife died and I went to pieces, and started in to help the sick and needy. Say, that girl has worked all day in the factory and uses every cent she can spare for others. They call her Lady Bountiful, but her real name is Alice Lisle. Last week she pawned her neck chain to buy a baby buggy for a little crippled child and pay the rent for a sick washerwoman. Say, I believe there's a mystery about her, too, and that's what you want in stories, don't you? She isn't no common clay, that's sure, and her pretty face and ways in a movie picture would make a whole play of itself."

Baldy furnished further details and Merrill bestowed a five-dollar bill upon him, but Baldy's final words were: "I say, mister, if Lady Bountiful turns out to be a princess in disguise and your story about her makes you famous, you'll blow me to an extra ten, eh?"

One week later Merrill Hoyt became a room tenant of an old woman on the same floor where Miss Lisle was located. The first sight he had of the young lady carried out the claim of Baldy that she was indeed "good and beautiful as an angel." A week spent in close proximity to herself and her humble neighbors proved a revelation to Merrill. There was not a woman or child in the old tenement that had not some story of kindness to disclose. Then Merrill was introduced to Miss Lisle by his landlady. Day by day he learned more and more to estimate her royal worth and night after night he wrote upon "his great book," which her loveliness and helpfulness inspired.

Merrill fell ill and never knew who had aided in nursing him until he was back to normal. It was his landlady who told him of the visits of Miss Lisle to assist her in caring for the delirious patient.

"And oh," she said, "how you raved, and all about her, and how you were going to write her in a lovely story. And she blushed so beautifully when in your fever you began to talk about love, and how she should be your own when you sold your book and—and here she comes now."

And, flushing from self-consciousness, Alice Lisle entered the room. It was the beginning of a pleasant association mutually cherished, and a few weeks later, well and strong again, Merrill told his love and all the story of his object in coming to the tenement.

"We will have to wait till my book brings in returns," he told the reciprocally happy girl, who smiled strangely and added a bewildering confidence.

She was the owner of the tenement and had a fortune of her own, and had assumed the role of a poor girl to get closer to the lives of the needy and lowly.

"We must share what I have together, dear," she whispered to Merrill, "for oh! the good we may do for these poor people whom we have taken into our lives."
