FUNERAL DIRECTORS AND EMBALMERS

MELROSE

A birthday surprise party was given at the home of Mr. and Mrs. Theodore Fridinger on Monday evening last, in honor of Mrs. Fridinger's 55th birthday, by her children. It was surely a great surprise. The children kept Mrs. F. in the back by capping strawberries until dust when the door bell rang and Mrs. F. went to the door and was so shocked that she fell against the wall. The evening was spent with social games, music and conversation. The hostess was the recipient of many useful gifts. The dining room was beautifully decorated with an arch above the table and a large cake with 55 burning candles on it. Ice cream, cake, bananas, candy, oranges and pop were served in abundance. At a late hour all returned to their homes wishing Mrs. F. many more happy and prosperous birthday. Those present were: Mr. and Mrs. Theodore Fridinger, Mr and Mrs. George Trump, Mr. and Mrs. Clinton Fridinger and family, Mr. and Mrs. Walter Fridinger and family, Mr. and Mrs. Lewis Lippy, Mr. and Mrs. Louih Martin, Mr. and Mrs. Howard Trump, Mrs. Effie Berwager, Mrs. Maranda Baker, Mrs. Charles Hively, Mrs. Minnetta Smith, Mrs. Thomas Green, Mrs. Benton Burgoon, Mrs. Gertie Gonder, Mrs. Jacob W. Warehime, Mrs. David J. Brown, Mrs. Geo. Folk, Mrs. Jacob Blocher, Mrs. Andrew Myers, Mrs. Dafid Yingling, Mrs. Jacob Warehime, sr., Mrs. Edward Kneller, Mrs. Martha Riley, Mrs. Edward Trump, Mrs. Jennings Green, Mises Laura and Delia Lippy, Miss Cecelia M. Shower, Miss Annie Belt, Miss Sebina Lynerd, Miss Mary Myers, Miss Nellie Trump, Miss Vesta Fridinger, Miss Edgie Weaver, Masters. Maurice and William Trump and Earl Warehime.

We wish to congratulate Mr. Charles Rusk, son of Mrs. Barbara Rusk, of near this place, and Miss Alta Wildasin, daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Alfred Wildasin, of Blooming Grove, who were married on Saturday evening last, by Rev. E. M. Sando, of Hanover, Pa. Mr. Rusk was formerly an employee of the El Dallo Cigar factory at Manchester, Md., but is now employed at Hanover, Pa. We wish them much happiness and prosperity throughout their wedded life.

We wish to congratulate Mr. C. Vernon Greifenstein and Miss Minnie Burgoon who were married on Saturday evening last by Rev. C. C. Leatherman, of Manchester, Md. The groom is an employee at Stermer's garage at this place. We wish them much happiness and success.

Mrs. Edna Sauble and daughter, Dorothy, left here on Tuesday for Kentland, Indiana, where they will spend some time with the former's uncle and aunt, Mr. and Mrs. John Berngen.

Mrs. Frank T. Crumrine, of Chicago, Ills., spent Friday last at the home of Mr. and Mrs. Charles Little, of this place.

Word has been received here of the arrival of a daughter at the home of Mr. and Mrs. Harry Grogg of Hanover, Pa. Mrs. Grogg was formerly Miss Elsie Eisenhuth of near this place.

A LOYAL GUARDIAN

By EVELYN LEE

(Copyright, 1920, Western Newspaper Union.)

Life seemed good all afternoon to Egbert Marston, with the strife of the morning over—stately trees to be under, soft turf to repose on. The last load of hay was in loft or stack. Marston lazily stretched himself and rest seemed sweet. Then he arose and advanced toward the broad open doorway of the barn, attracted by the flutter of a dress and the echo of silvery laughing tones.

There hung near an unused stall, a double yoke. Robert Burton had fashioned it himself nearly half a century previous, but oxen had given place to less clumsy and slow going stock, and the old yoke remained in view as reminder and relic. Madge Burton ran toward it and poked her sunny face and head through it.

"Boo!" she cried out, playfully to her adopted father, who was filling a measure with corn for the chickens.

"You need a mate to make the picture complete," declared Burton. "Reckon I'll have to find you one," and the girl flushed, embarrassed as Egbert came nearer.

"A yoke fellow?" he rallied. "Who wouldn't be glad to the 'task,'" he was going to say, for they all worked on the farm, Madge as well as the rest, and he supplemented the word "privilege," and then added, with an admiring glance at Madge, "and honor."

Robert Burton left the twain to themselves with a chuckle as a sudden idea flashed into his mind. "I wonder now," he soliloquized, "if I needn't worry any more about Madge being left alone in the world after I am gone?"

Meantime the couple he discussed came out into the yard, strolled in a desultory way and carried on a casual conversation under some restraint. That flash of admiration from Egbert's eyes as she made a pretty picture framed by the yoke had instantaneously enlightened Madge. The responsive glow in her face had, too, enlightened him. Egbert did not keep up his strain of gentle bantering, however.

It was just a month later that Robert Burton died. He had adopted Madge, a little girl, when his wife died, and an own daughter could not have been more loving, grateful and loyal. She had indeed been to him a helpful, cheerful "yoke fellow." To her work had become pleasure and she never shirked the severest toil.

It was the dead man's lawyer who unfolded the contents of a will recently made by the decedent. It was brief, simple and plain. Jointly all that Burton had to leave was to be inherited by Madge and Egbert, provided they married. Otherwise the main part of it was to go to charity.

"He would have it thus, Madge," spoke Egbert. "Am I to go away, or are we to be the yoke fellows your father hoped we would be?"

Madge said, "Stay," and there was fluttering joy in her tones as she did so. They had a quiet wedding, settled down readily and naturally into the new life, and happiness seemed assured.

At the end of a month Madge began to change. It puzzled and then grieved Egbert to note that her entire character seemed to undergo a development that he could not analyze. She was as kindly as ever and as to work bore more than her full share of it. She did not encourage the visits of neighbors, especially of her own sex. She rid the house of liquor, of which Mr. Burton had always carried a stock for harvest use and sickness. Egbert never went to town but she begged to go with him. She became economical to the point of penuriousness, and on an occasion when she and her husband visited the circus, in a sudden and almost frenzied manner hurried Egbert away from a stand where games of chance were going on.

Egbert Marston felt an invisible, but oppressive yoke restraining all the free and varied workings of his mind. He could not account for Madge's ever present watchfulness and her attempts to shut him out from the most ordinary independence of action.

One day Madge had gone over to nurse a sick neighbor for the afternoon and Egbert, ransacking the room for a razor he had mislaid, chanced to open the drawer of a desk that had always been Madge's own property. He did not locate the sought-for article, but chanced to come across some loose papers which he discerned at a glance had belonged to Mr. Burton.

One showed a crumpled soiled condition, as if it had been read a great many times. It was in Mr. Burton's own handwriting and it told of an investigation he had made. Its subject was a person he had thought of employing, but the reports he had received made out the applicant as a drinker, a gamester and undesirable generally.

"I've solved it!" almost shouted Egbert in a transport of glad enlightenment, and so satisfied was he that he had discovered a clew to Madge's strange action that he at once went over to the neighbors to see her.

"Madge," he spoke, when she joined him outside, "has that paper anything to do with the way you have acted?"

"Yes, everything," came the truthful reply. "My heart's one thought has been to keep you from becoming what you once were."

"Oh, you foolish, mistaken little fairy!" cried Egbert. "Mr. Burton read that paper to me once and told me it concerned a man he came near hiring, years before I found the happiness of my life in meeting you."

POULTRY

MITES ARE MOST INJURIOUS

Little Insects Suck Blood of Hen and Seriously Affect Her Ability to Lay Eggs.

If the best results are to be expected from the poultry flock, the buildings must not be allowed to become overrun with mites. Mites are more troublesome and more harmful than lice. They do not live upon the birds like the lice, but during the day hide in the cracks and crevices of the roosts and walls of the house, and at night they come out and get upon the fowls. They suck the hen's blood, and if allowed to become plentiful—as they certainly will if not destroyed—will seriously affect her health and consequently her ability to lay eggs.

Mites may be eradicated by a few thorough applications of kerosene or some of the coal-tar products which are sold for this purpose, or crude petroleum, to the interior of the poultry house.

The commercial coal-tar products are more expensive but retain their killing power longer, and they may be cheapened by reducing with an equal part of kerosene. Crude petroleum will spray better if thinned with one part of kerosene to four parts of the crude oil, according to poultry specialists of the United States department of agriculture. Both the crude petroleum and the coal-tar products often contain foreign particles, so should be strained before attempting to spray. One must be sure that the spray reaches all of the cracks and crevices, giving especial attention to the roosts, dropping-boards, and nests, and the treatment should be repeated two or three times at intervals of a week or 10 days.

GUINEA FOWLS ARE FAVORED

Hardiest of All Domestic Poultry and Great Hustlers—They Keep Away Marauders.

There is no good reason why more guineas should not be kept on the farm. They are just about the hardiest of all domestic fowls, and perhaps also the greatest hustlers, yet they seldom do their hustling to the injury of the garden or lawn. While quite domestic in their habits if treated gently, their wild nature leads them to remote parts of the homestead, where they pick up a large part of their living that would be overlooked by any other kind of fowl.

On farms infested with hawks, guineas are very valuable, their vigorous protests against every approach of the foe actually frighten them away. And no strange cat or dog can come on the place without their emphatic protest.

GOOD SHELTER FOR TURKEYS

Plain, Substantial House of Shed-Roof Type, Dry and Ventilated Is Recommended.

A plain, substantial house of the shed-roof type, dry, amply lighted and well ventilated, is the better way for providing shelter for turkeys.

Such a house simplifies the keeping of turkeys, and has many commendable features, for the successful turkey farmers, besides making easy the care and attention necessary at certain seasons of the year.

TURNING EGGS FOR HATCHING

Not Necessary, According to Professor Kaupp, Expert of North Carolina Station.

Turning eggs while saving them for hatching, although generally recommended and practiced by poultry keepers, is believed to be unnecessary. Rather thorough tests conducted by Prof. B. F. Kaupp of North Carolina station show no gain in hatch ability of eggs turned every day over similar lots which were kept undisturbed until placed in the incubator.

FOWLS GET LAZY IN SUMMER

Some Hens Are So Inactive That They Do Not Earn Their Feed During Hot Weather.

As a rule hens do not show great activity during hot weather, but there are some which become so lazy that they are not worth their feeding. Those are the hens that cut down their egg yield. Hot weather is worse for hens than cold weather, for during the winter months a hen with any life in her will busy herself to keep warm.
