POOR HATCHES IN INCUBATOR

Carelessness in Manipulation of Machine Is Sure to Bring Disastrous Results.

Many causes for poor hatches of chicks in incubators can be traced to the operators not educating themselves on what is necessary in the way of fertile eggs, saving eggs for incubation and taking care of them. Eggs for incubation should be kept in a well ventilated room with medium temperature. All eggs should be turned at least once every 24 hours, and no eggs should be over ten days or two weeks old at the outside.

One should be careful to strictly follow the directions accompanying the incubator. The directions for one make of machine do not always do for that of another make, for the ventilation, regulation, etc., may be different.

The principal reason why young chicks die in the shell about the eighteenth day is a poorly ventilated room.

Other causes than poorly ventilated rooms are poorly ventilated incubators, and eggs are not properly fertilized. An egg poorly fertilized will start to grow and die for lack of vitality. Opening up the incubator during the latter part of the hatch, or about the time the chicks begin to pip, lets out the moisture and dries the chicken up in the shell, or, in other words, stops the pores of the shell, and causes a great many to die. Under no condition should the incubator be opened after the eighteenth day until the chicks are entirely hatched.

As a rule, beginners with incubators do not read the book of directions properly. Many a person who has seen an incubator, and probably run a hatch of some other make thinks he knows all about it, does not read the directions and makes a flat failure every time. Sometimes no consideration is given to the ventilation of the room in which the machine is placed. Possibly there may be decayed vegetables therein, or the air is stale.

There are few failures nowadays by poorly regulated incubators, except in the cheaper line of machines where the temperature will change 10, 12 and 15 degrees. One point I have noticed here at home by having a green hand set an incubator, says a writer in an exchange. He reads the directions, maybe thinks he has learned them by heart, sets his regulator as soon as the thermometer gets to 103, turns the thumb screw where he supposes is right, and places the eggs in the machine.

Now, the thumb screw and regulator is a very tender affair, and one turn of the thumb screw will cause a change in the atmosphere inside the incubator of three to four degrees. It should be turned slightly, about one-fourth of the way round, so the temperature stands just at 103.

A great mistake is made by paying too much attention to an incubator. I never see to my machine more than twice a day, once in the morning and once in the evening. I see that the regulator is set properly and everything running nicely before putting in the eggs, and then place the eggs in it and do not touch the regulator. At first it will lower the temperature a little when the eggs are put in, but if the regulator is properly set, the temperature will rise to the proper degree.

TREAT POULTRY FOR VERMIN

One of the best methods to keep poultry free from lice is to provide a "dust bath." This may be made of a box large enough to accommodate several fowls at a time and partly filled with road dust, tobacco dust and sulphur, according to the following proportion: Road dust, six parts; tobacco dust, one part; sulphur, two handfuls.

Dipping chickens in a two per cent solution of chlorine is also recommended for the control of lice.

UNCLE TED'S BED-TIME STORIES

Harding's Genuine Americanism

"Please tell us about what Senator Harding said in his big speech." It was Jack speaking, as usual teasing his Uncle Ted for a story.

"I could possibly tell you all he said tonight," answered Uncle Ted, "but if you and Ruth will promise to go to bed early tomorrow night I'll tell you all I can. You remember what I told you last week, now Mr. Cox has stated that he is going to fight for the World Club and how after his talk with President Wilson it was shown by the statement both men made that Mr. Wilson is still the ruler of the Democratic party. Since the day when Mr. Cox and Mr. Wilson had their talk and it was shown to the world that if Mr. Cox were elected President Mr Wilson would still rule the country, a great man has made a great speech.

"On Thursday, July 22, Senator Warren G. Harding made the opening speech of his campaign when he accepted the Republican candidacy for President."

"Did he say he wanted the World Club?" asked Ruth.

"I should say NOT!" answered Uncle Ted. "He knows, as we all know, that we have peace. But he is not willing tohave a peace at the cost of a World Club. When Mr. Harding becomes President we will have peace, and the right kind. In his speech he said, 'I promise you formal and effective peace so quickly as a Republican Congress can pass its declaration for a Republican executive to sign.' In other words, if he had been President when Congress passed the resolution declaring peace with Germany he would not have refused to sign it as did Woodrow Wilson. He will not try to run the whole Government without the advice of other big men, neither will he try to run it with disregard of the Constitution of the United States. On this point he said, 'No man is big enough to run this great republic. There never has been one. Such domination was never intended.' After the long years of rule in this country by one man, after we have seen a man sit in the White House who cares more for the interests of foreign countries than he does for the problems at home, it is a wonderful relief to hear a man speak, who, when he is seated in the White House, will save this country from the plots of Europe and Asia and who will wipe one-man government and internationalism from the face of America's map and replace it with the good old-fashioned nationalism that started when the fathers wrote the Declaration of Independence.

"Suppose, kiddies, that we had not had men in the United States Senate who refused to see our country dragged into a World Club. If there had not been that band of Senators who refused to approve the World Club as Mr. Wilson said it had to be, we would undoubtedly be saying 'Good Bye' to thousands of American boys starting to Europe every few days to fight."

"To fight for what?" asked Jack.

"To fight for Poland. The Russian bolshevists, for Russia is now ruled by bolshevists, have been fighting, trying to defeat and wipe out Poland. Poland was set up as an independent nation by the treaty of peace and was formerly a part of the Russian Empire. Although they have now stopped fighting, under an armistice such as stopped the great war on November 11, 1918, the trouble will not be settled so easily and more fighting is sure to follow. The Russians threaten to go into Poland with their arms, and because Poland is a member of the World Club the other members must join in the fighting. If we were a member of the World Club today it might mean that almost any time we would have to send soldiers and money to help Poland if the managers of the Club told us to. When they read Article X of the World Club plan and heard Mr. Wilson say that this Article would bind us to assist other members of the Club who might be attacked, the majority of the members of the Senate saw that the United States would be bound to send American boys to fight foreign battles. So, in order to guard against being drawn into wars that do not concern us, the majority of the Senate adopted a resolution that relieved the United States from all obligations. This resolution kept the United States in the same position it has always occupied; that is, that when the interests of the country demand our going to war we can do so by act of Congress.

"We do not need to be a member of the World Club in order to go to the assistance of Poland, if the people want to do so. In ten days, with a special session of Congress, we can act to aid Poland but WE DO NOT AND MUST NOT BE FORCED TO DO SO UNDER A WORLD CLUB.

"So, kiddies, when the American people go to the polls next November to vote for President they can American boys overseas to fight for foreign countries by voting for Cox, or that they want to keep out of quarrels that don't concern us and return to Government by the Constitution by voting for Harding."

"I'll bet they will vote for Harding," said Jack.

"Yes, Jack, the American people want to see us governed once again as the fathers intended, and when Senator Warren G. Harding is elected we can be sure that one-man government is at an end.'

VOVE THE STRAIGHT TICKET

Washington, Aug. 5,—This is a campaign to terminate one-man government, declares the Republican Publicity Association, through its President, Hon. Jonathan Bourne, Jr., in a statement issued today, as follows:

"Senator Harding is against one-man government and believes in party responsibility. Hence, he would choose a cabinet of competent men and make the vice president a real factor in the government. The logic of that kind of a policy also requires that if Mr. Harding shall be given authority as head of the executive branch of the government he should also be given the co-operation of a Congress controlled by members of the same party.

"The Republican party has declared in its platform for a return to constitutional government, which means a recognition of the coordinate status of the legislative branch of the government. The Democratic party, by its record, has committed itself to the domination of Congress by the Executive. Voters who believe in the Constitution and in the principles of representative government and who expect to vote for Mr. Harding should also work zealously for the election of Republicans to the Senate and House of Representatives. Thus only can party responsibility be established.

"If we are to have a continuation of one-man government—if the people of the country desire to have this nation conducted by a man who insists that all his cabinet members shall be mere puppets and the Congress shall bow to his every command, then it is immaterial who constitute the legislative branch of the government. If men are to be rubber stamps, it makes little difference what particular names or party designations the stamps may bear. But if we are to have an administration such as the Constitution contemplates and good business sense requires—composed of men who shall cooperate in carrying out certain principles and policies of government set forth in party platforms, then it is highly important that the executive branch shall have the assistance of a legislative branch committed to the same policies.

"Mr. Harding freely admits that he is not big enough to run the whole government alone. He gives assurance of his desire to enlist the aid of other men of similar political principles. If therefore, it be the judgment of the people of the country that the powers of government should be exercised by many men instead of one, they should not only elect Mr. Harding but should send to the Senate and House men who entertain similar views of the proper method of conducting the business of the greatest government on the face of the globe.

"Mr. Cox is running upon a platform that contains unqualified endorsement of the Wilson administration. Mr. Wilson has found Mr. Cox 'absolutely at one' with him on the league of nations question. Members of the Democratic party in the House and Senate have shown a disposition to subordinate themselves to the Presidents will. If therefore the people of the country want a continuance of the Wilsonian policy of one-man government, they should support Cox and the Democratic candidates for the Senate and House, thus insuring perpetuation of autocracy.

"This is not merely a presidential campaign—it is a campaign for determination of fundamental policies of government—a campaign to determine whether this shall continue government by autocracy or a return to representative government as defined by the Constitution."
