An Open Letter

To the Editor of the Sykesville Herald,
My dear Mr. Hall:-

Each week I read with great pleasure the Observations of "Uncle Mort" in the columns of the Herald, and usually find myself in complete accord with his views, and with little to adversely criticise. I believe that he wants to be fair to all men, but, in my judgment, he has, in your issue of October 21st, 1920, treated Ovington E. Weller, Republican candidate for the United States Senate most unfairly.

"Uncle Mort," who is commonly supposed to be Major A. M. Hall, the editor, says:-

"Carroll county voted out the saloon. If a wet Congress comes in and the sale of bear and wine is again authorized, every community in this county will have its saloons again, and there will be no way under the law to keep them out."

"The women know that Carville Benson is pledged to the liquor forces to do this thing if he can. They know that O. E. Weller is pledged in the most positive way to do all in his power, if elected to the Senate, to do this thing. No thoughtful woman is going to vote to again restore the saloon blight to the Nation and upon Carr county."

I hold no brief either for or against Mr. Benson, and as to whether the statements of "Uncle Mort" with respect to him are accurate or inaccurate, I make no assertion. Therefore, leaving out the reference to Mr. Benson, I do wish strongly to assert that only one statement made by "Uncle Mort", as quoted above, is strictly true. That true statement is "That no thoughtful woman is going to vote to again restore the saloon blight upon the Nation and upon Carroll county," He might have gone further and said that no thoughtful man would so cast his vote.

Taking up first, the declaration of "Uncle Mort" that if a wet Congress should authorize the sale of beer and wine, "every community in Carroll county will have its saloons again, and there will be no way under the law to keep them out, I will use no harsh word to characterize it, for I do not question his sincerity. But I do not think that sincerity will excuse such an inaccurate statement, a statement which is absolutely incorrect and without foundation in fact or in law.

The people of Carroll county did 'vote out the saloon", and no power but the people of Carroll county can ever bring back the saloon within her boarders. If Congress should by unanimously wet; if it should repeal the Volstead Act; even if the 18th Amendment were by Congressional action nullified; even if the Amendment itself were resubmited to the States and annulled; Carroll county would be unaffected. Carroll is "Anti-Saloon Territory" and will so remain whomsoever may be elected to Senate and to Congress.

In proof that my legal opinion is corect, I would refer you to the fact that in delivering his charge to the Grand Jury of Anne Arundel county last week, His Honor Judge Robert Moss called attention to the fact that the Prohibitory Amendment to the Constitution and the Volstead Act in no way interfered with or made less binding the Anti-Saloon laws of Maryland, and strongly urged the grand jury to investigate the alleged sales of intoxicating liquor by bootleggers and others in Anne Arundel county, and where sufficient evidence can be obtained to present and indict all offenders that they may be punished in Maryland Courts, under Maryland laws.

The use, therefore, of such an argument of that of "Uncle Mort to mislead the women of Carroll county, and induce them to vote against O. E. Weller is as unfair as the statements upon which the argument is founded are untrue.

Taking up the declaration of "Uncle Mort" that "O. E. Weller is pledged to the liquor forces in the most positive way to do all in his power if elected to do this thing," namely to bring back the saloon into Carroll county and elsewhere; I can say only this, that I have seen or heard of no statement of Mr. Weller that warrants any such charge. For me simply to deny that Mr. Weller has made such a statement should carry no more weight than does "Uncle Mort's" assertion that he has so pledged himself.

But, in support of my honest belief, (largely founded upon my knowledge of Mr. Weller's personal character and habits, and confidence in his good common sense,) that Mr. Weller has made no such pledge, I make this challenge:-

If "Uncle Mort" or any one else will furnish me with indisputable proof that O. E. Weller favors any law, which will again bring it about, to use "Uncle Mort's" own words, that "every community in this county will have its saloons again," I hereby pledge myself to vote against O. E. Weller as a candidate for the United States Senate.

I know that Mr. Weller has said that he favors a modification of the Volstead Act. I also know that at the time Mr. Weller made that declaration, the Government authorities had interpreted the act in such a way that multitudes of people believed that a house-wife could not make home-made wine for family use without becoming a criminal. I also know that not only Mr. Weller, but many others, including men like the Reverend Dr. Russell Conwell, of the great Philadelphia Tabernacle, believed that such an interpretation of the law was too drastic. I also know that the Government authorities have now changed the interpretation of the law, and by interpretation have MODIFIED what was at first declared to be the meaning of the Volstead Act, and that under the latest ruling of the Government house-wives can make wine and farmers cider containing more than one-half of one-per cent of alcohol.

The people who are willing to work only five days a week, are convinced that the government should do something to improve business.

The fact that the government always wastes billions does not prove that a voter can spare 30 cents worth of his valuable time to go to the polls.

If you go into business and make money, the public slams you as a profiteer, and if you go in and lose money, the public slurs you as a fool.

Saturday last a large number of persons watched a steeple jack finish the work of placing the gilded cross on the steeple of St. John's Catholic Church, this city.

Mr. George N. Hunter's pacing horse, Duke of Westminster, that this year won all the races in which he was entered, is now at home to rest up during the winter.

It is not surprising that the new women voters do not retain their faith in the supreme intelligence of the male sex, when they find so few of the men who can tell who their congressman is.

The marked deficiency in knowledge of the English language among high school graduates coming to college is due largely to the great number of pupils given over to the care of a single teacher, in the opinion of Associate Prof. John C. French, department of English, Johns Hopkins University.

Any one desiring a copy of a cloth bound memorial book containing eulogies on the life, work and character of the late Honorable Joshua F. C. Talbotts, former Democratic Congressman of this district, may obtain the same by writing to Congressman Carville D. Benson at his Baltimore office, 1301 Fidelity Building, or at his Washington address, Room 116 House Office Building, Washington, D.
