TELEPHONE TRYOUTS BEFORE BELL FAILED

(From the New York Sun.)

Prof. A. Graham Bell was acclaimed the inventor of the telephone when, February 12, 1877, he established verbal communication over a distance of 18 miles by means of "the articulating"; and no one will ever attempt to rob Edison of the triumph he scored when, on November 11, 1887, he used his carbon "loud speaking" over 115 miles of wire.

But to find the man who really conceived the idea of conveying sounds over a distance we must go back as far as 1821. An Englisman, Wheatstone, sent the sounds of a music box over a considerable distance by means of a deal rod.

Forty years went by. In 1861 a German professor, Philip Reis, exhibited a partially articulate electric telephone at Frankfort. Cromwell Varley, in 1870, came to the front with another musical transmitter, and three years later Elisha Gray showed an improvement on Deis' method, which was hailed as the great invention of the day.

MELROSE

The members of Bachman's Church, of both denominations, realized the need of a good lighting system and soon ingenious minds and willing hands devised ways and means to secure it. About three weeks ago the Lutheran Sunday school held a chicken supper which resulted in netting a neat sum towards the object. On last Thursday night the Union Sunday School held a chicken supper, realizing a net sum of $129.00, to add to that which is already appropriated. Both sums represent a neat sum, showing that in "unity there is strength". The church has purchased a Western Electric Lighting system which will be installed in a few days.
