LIVE STOCK

SHOOT SHEEP-KILLING DOGS

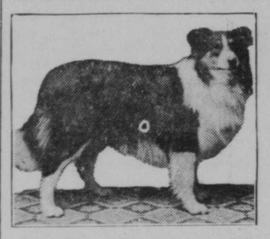

No Consideration Should Be Given Such Animals and Should Be Destroyed at Once.

Prepared by the United States Department of Agriculture

The sheep-killing dog constitutes one of the greatest menaces to the sheep industry. Such dogs not only kill sheep, but keep out of the sheep business men who are otherwise inclined to go into it, say specialists of the United States Department of Agriculture.

Sheep-killing dogs work both singly and in groups, but usually in twos or threes. They do not limit their attacks to the flocks of the immediate vicinity in which they are kept, but travel for miles in all directions, spreading destruction in the flocks with which they come in contact. Because their work is so often done under the cover of darkness it is almost impossible to catch them in the act of worrying sheep.

After a dog has once formed the habit of killing sheep it seemingly becomes a mania with him and he is seldom if ever broken of it. He not only destroys sheep himself but leads other dogs to the work. No consideration should be given such dogs; and if additional losses from this source are to be avoided, they should be killed as soon as their habits are known.

FEEDING CATTLE FOR PROFIT

Market Requirements for Beef Are Much Higher Than in Former Years—Skill Needed.

The feeding of beef cattle for the market has become a special line of work, which requires a high grade of skill through understanding of the feeding values of different materials used in the production of beef; as well as an appreciation of the requirements of animal nutrition and shrewd business ability. Without these prerequisites the feeder is doomed to receive very small returns for his labor. The market requirements for beef at present are much higher than in former years. It is necessary, therefore, in order to obtain prices which will pay the feeder for his time and outlay, to produce a herd of cattle as nearly uniform as possible in appearance and quality, with a high market finish and symmetrical development, particularly in those parts which yield high-priced cuts in which the profits lie for the butcher.

ARRANGE WALLOWS FOR HOGS

Water Must Be Supplied Not Only for Drinking but for Animals to Cool Bodies.

Hogs in pasture where there is no water are likely to suffer, not only for drinking water, but for water in which to cool their bodies. Slops are not sufficient. The hogs should have water in their troughs and in the wallow to cool themselves when the burning rays of the sun makes their lives a torture.

Hogs have a way of ridding themselves of troublesome parasites when they have a muddy wallow. Nature, it seems, helps them to survive as the fittest when there is a struggle for existence with parasites.

Hogs that must be penned should have shade and plenty of water. It is bad enough to be kept in pen without a struggle with heat and thirst. Give them shade and water.

PLAN TO PREVENT INFECTION

Newly Purchased Animals Should Be Quarantined in Separate Pens for Two Weeks.

Do not place newly purchased stock, stock procured or borrowed for breeding purposes, or stock exhibited at fairs immediately with your herd. Keep such stock quarantined in separate pens for at least two weeks, and use care in feeding and attending stock to prevent carrying infection from these to other pens.

BOAR HAS GREAT INFLUENCE

Breeding Animal Should Be Placed in Good-Sized Yard and Away From Rest of Herd.

How about the herd boar? Get him out in a good-sized yard, away from the rest of the herd. Remember he is half of the breeding power of the herd, and that his influence on the profits for the year amounts to more than that of any one sow.
