[illegible] that. His life seemed hard then there came a rush of "Rush, Ruth!" and the door burst a startled face.

Manlike, Frank grew exasperated, and while the visitors remained absented himself well-nigh altogether from the Krann farmhouse. But when they had gone he could not help seeing how pale Ruth had grown, and noticing the dark circles purpling her eyes. Whereupon he promptly [illegible] to prescribe for her cure, and then fully.

Late the Sunday evening after the guests had departed, the hired men were away, and Kraun himself had not yet returned from a lovefeast and feet-washing in the next county, to which he had gone the day before. Sister Krann dozed peacefully in her rocking-chair, sleeping the sleep which always fell upon her when her busy hands were folded in unbroken rest, and the lovers had the room practically all to themselves in the pleasant summer twilight. So they made up the quarrel in which no words had been spoken, and Ruth had urgotten father and creed, till her [illegible] had [illegible] to [illegible]

"Shall I speak to your father to-morrow?"

"Will you join the brethren?" she asked in reply. The proposition startled Frank; he had never imagined she could make it the vision of himself in the [illegible] [illegible] [illegible] [illegible] answered quietly:

"My darling, that is impossible. I have the highest reverence for the patriarchs and apostles, but the world has outgrown their mode of living. You must come [illegible] [illegible] [illegible] God, my God."

"Nay, but she turned from the worship of idols to the true God. You would have me turn from God unto idols." He would have spoken but she checked him. "Hearken, I pray thee, hear me out. The desire of my father's heart is that I should marry brother Mesrop, and it must grieve him, for now that cannot be. Nevertheless, though, for your sake I shall anger my father, I may not depart from the faith of my fathers and deny my God."

It was vain to argue with her—this was her simple reasoning in which he could not shake her; the martyr spirit of her forefathers was strong within her, and though she wept, she was firm. Entreaties, tears, battles as argument, what could he do? Ruth was a child of prayer, with pious texts and made a shield of the New Testament against him? In fact he grew angry. Had she been one of the primitive Christians, and he a pagan lover praying her to sacrifice to Jupiter, she could not have been more resolute. Possibly, indeed, the self-sacrifice of this Dunkard girl cost her even more; though she was unable to draw the parallel. For the Christians of those days looked upon the stake as a chariot of fire to heaven, a sharp, short pathway to unutterable glory; but for Ruth there seemed nothing but unlimited suffering to tread her own heart-sick, sin-fancied, that of her lover, also to endure hopelessly. "Howling, O, Lord? How long?" So she sobbed that night when the interviewer was over, and on her knees before the God, whom she thought she did service by thus wringing her hand, she prayed for strength to take up her heavy cross and stagger along under it.

The Dunkards are fearfully unorthodox, beyond doubt, with their old notions and literal interpretations of Scripture, but they are earnest in what they believe; if the path they have chosen is unnecessarily straight, at least they walk carefully therein.

Some days went by, bringing no change; Ruth, though sad, was tolerable of mind, Frank grew to feel himself illused. They had little chance for discussing the matter, however; there was careful work to be done on the railroad just then, and Frank was too busy either to mope or quarrel.

Ruth was ironing at the window one afternoon with light hand and heavy heart. The week previous had made the noise of blasting familiar to her, and she scarcely listened to the thunders now, so full was she of Frank's thought.

"Yer pa at home?"

It was a stranger who spoke—one of the railroad hands, evidently, for his clothes were earth-stained.

"Yes, he is reaping in yon field," and then, as the man's excited manner impressed her, "Is aught the matter?"

"Matter 'nough; Cap'n Elright's done hit wid a blast and done killed. It took him right here—in de brees'."

He finished the story to Sister Krann, who had rushed into the kitchen at Ruth's shriek, and who gazed in blank astonishment at her daughter speeding over the hill in the direction of the railroad in such haste as never before she had known her to make. "Ruth! Ruth!" she called, but Ruth did not heed. Indeed, she was already too far away to hear.

The little group gathered at the scene of the accident, talking in excited whispers, fell apart silently as she reached them, opening a way for her in their midst. "Good Good, was that Frank? Did she see? Did she hear? The men whispered together, and Colonel Lewis called her by name, but on her knees beside what had been her lover, she moved not, nor spoke.

"Ruth, my daughter, what do you here?"

It was her father's voice; but even then she did not stir until he laid his hand upon her shoulder.

"I could never have married him, father, and I told him so. I could not give up the faith; but now that he is dead, surely I may weep for him, for he loved me, oh, father, and I loved him so!"—and then, for God is merciful and knows just how much we can bear, she fainted.

Other hands than Jacob Krann's harvested his ripe wheat fields, while he and his wife kept prayerful watch at the bedside of their only child.

The medical knowledge of the world's people was called into save her, it might be, and love and skill fought the battle with death hand in hand. They triumphed. Death rarely comes to those who would welcome him and just where the river of life meets the ocean of eternity one side buried, leaving that weak and celeste, but alive.

There is no more devout sister in all the brotherhood than Ruth Krann. Visiting the sick, comforting the afflicted, "instant in every good word and work" all who know her sin an angel of mercy.

Johann Meair has taken him another wife, and Ruth has no suitors, though her father's wealth increases year by year, and she is fairer than ever in her black dress. The Dunkard maiden who was never a wife is a widow, indeed.

Mind Your Own Business.

Archbishop Alemany, of San Francisco, has been made a special target for abuse by the hyper agitators of that city, because he refused to deny, and exercised it, to denounce the movement and warn his own flock against its dangers and schemes. Kearney, who is the leading spirit of the agitators, and who seems to be permitted to run riot with his tongue in the utterance of outrageous defamation of prominent citizens opposing him, and the threatening of "bloody war" if necessary to achieve his ends, singled out the Archbishop on various occasions as his worst enemy, the chief barrier in fact between him and success. That the venerable prelate "don't scare worth a cent," was amply demonstrated the other day. Kearney, with a deputation of his followers, had the audacity to make a call on the Archbishop, possibly in expectation of "frightning him out of his wits" and thereby compelling him to yield from his noble stand in behalf of law, order and common sense. The revolutionary and fanatical leader made a long and terrific harangue to the Archbishop, to which the latter listened meekly, patiently and calmly, and then he sent his adversary away with "a flea in his ear" and some substantial material for hideous dreams, in this wise. Said the Archbishop:

"My Kearney, I understand that you wish me to mind my own business. Very good; perhaps you know what my business is better than I do. But, Mr. Kearney, there is only one gentlemen who is at present authorized to show me how to mind my business, and that is the Pope of Rome. Perhaps, Mr. Kearney, if you will write to him he will transfer that power to you. And now let me tell you a little story, Mr. Kearney. I have lived here a great many years, and I know the temper of the people of California pretty well, and a long time ago, before you had come to America, I went to bed one night leaving everything going on in the city as quiet. Well, Mr. Kearney, after a comfortable night's rest I arose and looked out of the window, and there in the street was a poor fellow hanging by his neck, quite dead, suspended from a lamp-post. He was a poor fellow who did not know how to mind his own business, Mr. Kearney, and that was all! You mind your business well, Mr. Kearney, and I will mind mine. Good morning."

APPLETON'S American Cyclopædia.

NLW REVISED EDITION.

Entirely Rewritten by the Ablest Writers on Every Subject.

Printed from New Type, and illustrated with several thousand Engravings and Maps.

The work originally published under the title of the New American Cyclopædia was completed in 1863, since which time the whole circuit upon which it has attained in parts of the United States, and the signal advance made in the sciences, literature, and arts, have led the editors and publishers to embark in an exact and thorough revision, and issue a new edition entitled

The American Cyclopædia.

Within the last ten years the progress of discovery in every department of knowledge has made a new work of reference an imperative want.

The movement of political affairs has kept pace with the discoveries of science, and their fruitful application to the industrial and useful arts and conveniences and refinement of social life. Great wars and consequent revolutions have occurred, involving national changes of peculiar moment. The civil war of our own country, which was at its height when the last volumes of the old work appeared has happily been ended, and a new course of commercial and industrial activity has been commenced. Large accessions to our have been made to the indefatigable explorers of Africa.

The great political revolutions of the last decade, with the natural result of the lapse of time, who have brought into public view a multitude of new men, whose names are in every one's mouth, and of whose lives every one is curious to know the particulars. Great battles have been fought and important sieges maintained, of which the details are anxiously preserved only in the newspapers, or in the transient publications of the day, but which ought now to take their places in Permanent and Authentic History.

In preparing the present edition for the press it has accordingly been the aim of the editors to bring down the information to the latest possible dates, and to furnish an accurate account of the most recent discoveries in science, of every fresh production in literature, and of the newest inventions in the practical arts, as well as to give a succinct and original record of the progress of Political and Historical Events.

The work was begun after long and careful preliminary labor, and with the most ample resources for carrying it on to a successful termination.

None of the original stereotype plates have been used, but every page has been forming in fact, a new Cyclopædia, with the same plan and compass as its predecessor, but with a far greater pecuniary expenditure, and with such improvements in its composition as have been suggested by longer experience and enlarged knowledge.

Printed on New Type,

The Illustrations,

which are introduced for the first time in the present edition, have been added not for the sake of pictorial effect, but to give lucidity and force to the explanations in the text. They embrace all branches of science, and of natural history, and depict the most famous and remarkable features of the scenery, architecture, and art, as well as the various processes of mechanics and manufacturers. Although intended for instruction rather than embellishment, no pains have been spared to insure their Artistic Excellence.

The cost of their execution is enormous, and it is believed they will find a welcome reception as an admirable feature of the Cyclopædia, and worthy of its high character.

The American Cyclopædia is Now Complete, in sixteen large octavo volumes, each volume containing over 800 pages, fully illustrated with several thousand Wood Engravings, and with numerous Colored Lithographic Maps, the whole costing the publisher a sum exceeding exclusive of paper, printing, and binding.

Prices and Style of Binding.

In Library Leather, per vol.,	6 00
In Half Turkey Morocco, per vol.	7 00

The Best Cyclopædia ever Published, one that will supersede all others, is now offered to the public at a very moderate price less than one cent a page!

Just think!

A Saving of Ten Cents per Day,

the price of a cigar, or many other expenditures for luxuries or frivolities of a like amount, would pay for a complete set of the Cyclopædia by a bi-monthly subscription. Thus there will be something substantial saved, and a storehouse of knowledge, indeed

A Universal Library in Itself.

Secured, with but little effort or sacrifice.

☞ Specimen pages of The American Cyclopædia, showing types, illustrations, etc., will be sent gratis on application.

Persons wishing to subscribe, can receive the whole set at one time, or one or more volumes at any time, the delivery suiting their convenience, without any cost of carriage, by forwarding their address to
