POULTRY

Pays to Market Spring Cockerels at Two Pounds

With the present price of feeds, says the Ohio Agricultural college, farmers cannot afford to keep their spring-hatched cockerels until the holiday season to sell them. After a growing cockerel reaches 1½ to 2 pounds it is an inefficient consumer of feed for meat production.

The price of cockerels is always higher during the spring and summer months than in the fall when many farmers dispose of their surplus cockerels. The slump in price is due to two causes: (1) The large size cockerel is less desirable on the table. (2) The cockerel must compete on the market with the surplus hens, with a resulting slump in price.

In case the cockerels are kept until fall they should be crate fattened, as they will then bring a premium on the market. The birds should be confined in a small coop or fattening battery and fed twice a day on the following ration: 70 pounds of corn meal, 30 pounds high grade shorts or middlings, and 10 pounds of wheat bran. This should be mixed with sufficient sour skim milk or butter milk to make a mixture of the consistency of a thick cream.

The birds should be starved 12 hours after putting in the crate and then fed all they will clean up of the above feed in 10 minutes.

The amount of feed fed can be gradualy increased until two full feeds a day have been supplied. No water should be given during the feeding period.

A gain of 25 to 40 per cent can be made in 12 to 14 days.

Geese Will Bring Very Good Margin of Profit

"One who has not had the pleasure to watch a little gosling pop out of the shell and see it grow to maturity would be surprised to know in how short a time it is done. At first it is a little downy fellow, weighing not over four ounces; a round, fluffy little ball of wool. The wing feathers and breast feathers start to grow first. They will continue to have a downy appearance until they become two or three months old and then the feathers will begin to replace the down. During their growth they will generally average an additional pound for each month. From a commercial standpoint the geese will bring a very good margin of profit, for the cost of feeding them is very small where they can range upon vegetation. The demand at the markets for these fowls during the holidays is much greater than the supply, and the prices at which this product sells at this period should be a good inducement to those who have the facilities to raise more geese.

Green Feed Is Valuable for Its Mineral Matter

Green feed is valuable, not only for its succulence, which makes it palatable to poultry, but also because it contains mineral matter, including nutritive constituents, necessary to sustain life, promote growth, and assure reproduction. Foremost among these constituents are the vitamines, the absence of which from any ration, whether for humans, animals or birds, will ultimately prove fatal.

Therefore it behooves every poultry keeper, whether backyarder, specialist, or farmer, to make provision for an ample supply of green feed in some form, and in view of the shortness of our growing season, and the late spring experienced this year, no time should be lost.

Poultry Notes

Ducks should be fed wet mashes, principally.

* * *

Wheat, oats and barley are the best of small grains for poultry.

* * *

If your hens do not produce more than ninety eggs each a year they are not making a profit.

* * *

The early chick is stronger, more able to overcome obstacles than his later-hatched brother. Bugs, worms and green feed supplement his diet.

* * *

Cleanliness is essential in raising chickens. See that all houses and coops are thoroughly disinfected before the chicks are placed in them.

* * *

Young ducks seldom thrive on whole grains of any kind, and leg weakness, the worst foe of successful duck raising, is sure to result from improperly balanced rations.

* * *

Minorcas are not considered very good winter layers in cold climates but make good summer layers. They lay very large, white shelled eggs.

* * *

It is of extreme importance that poultry have access to plenty of coarse grit, as well as oyster shell and charcoal.

* * *

Turkeys must have freedom as much as possible and free range in summer if they are to do well. They will do well on the same rations as chickens.
