MELROSE

The Frock store stand, purchased by Mr. Silas Rohrbaugh in April, has again changed hands, having been purchased by Mr. George Strauss, of Baltimore, who is taking charge of the business at once, having moved his family and household effects on Monday last.

Mr. Edward Weaver, of our town, working regularly for Mr. Thomas Shaffer, of near Frindinger's Mill, met with a very painful accident one day last week. While assisting with a heavy load of wheat, about 80 bushels on the wagon, the heavy vehicle passed over his two feet, bruising and lacerating them in a very painful manner.

Mr. and Mrs. Noah Peterman, Mr. and Mrs. Heilman and children, spent Sunday in town visiting relatives and friends.

We notice that one of the correspondents wrote last week about the road between Manchester and Hampstead being "repaired." This is a mistake, as the old macadamized road full of ruts and little fishponds is being plowed up and rebuilt, wider and better than the job they tried to do nearly eight years ago and they expect to have it completed for traffic on or about the first of October.

If President Coolidge straightens out four important agitations of the present time and generation, he will receive the grateful thanks of our nation: First, the Farmers' problems; 2nd, the Peace Problem; Third, the Coal Situation; Fourth, the Booze Problem.

Wentz's Union Sunday school, having had a successful summer, both spiritually and financially, expect to treat the one hundred or more regular scholars in the near future.

One day last week we had the pleasure of meeting a long time acquaintance, on the streets of Hanover, who is a veteran school teacher, having taught the "Kolies," as some teachers prefer to call boys of a certain age, for 42 years, and has been in Sunday school for more than a half century, as a scholar, president, teacher and superintendent. And he is still youthful in spirits, giving a small girl accompaning him, a silver coin for a "treat" to be eaten and enjoyed. His name is George Kling.

It may not be necessary to have an extra session of Congress to get laws passed, but most of the representatives have speeches that must be delivered.

Mr. William Schmidt, Mr. and Mrs. Charles Warsdell, Mr. and Mrs. Ira Rigger and son of Baltimore, called at Mr. John Spencer's Sunday.

Deer Park Christian Endeavors are planning to go to Druid Hill park Saturday, September 1, on an all day outting. Basket lunch will be taken with them.

The Deer Park picnic Saturday was a success in every way. The day was an ideal one.

Tent meeting will begin at Deer Park, September 9. Everybody welcome.

Howard Roberts, Sparrows Point, is visiting his sister, Mrs. Estelle Spencer.

UNION MILLS

The work of cleaning up and replacing the tombstones of the old cemetery at Silver Run, is making favorable progress. Most of the weeds and undergrowth have been removed and nearly all of the stones have been reset. They are placed in cement in two rows running east and west through the cemetery. Each row has backs to backs, two lines of stones. Several of the large pine trees and some shrubbery were left standing. When the present work is completed the entire enclosure will be set in grass.

The new McAdam state road, running over the bed of the old county road, two miles west from Silver Run Reformed church, is nearly completed.

One day last week a separator wheel ran over the left foot of Thos. Utz, Deep Run valley, crushing several of its small bones.

George W. Yeiser has had an artesian well drilled on the old Carroll Academy lot, and some of the machinery for his sewing factory has arrived and has been placed in position in the academy building.

Mrs. Robert S. Shriver and her two sons, of Baltimore, are spending this week with Miss Mary O. Shriver.

Harry L. Cratin, Harry N. Groft and Weldon R. Nusbaum, with their families, enjoyed a trip to Atlantic City, on the Pennsylvania railroad excursion, from Littlestown, Pa., last Sunday.

LIVE STOCK

More Summer Fattening of Cattle Is Suggested

More summer feeding of young cattle for market is suggested by W. H. Peters of the animal industry division, Minnesota College of Agriculture, who has been watching market quotations on grain-fed cattle and finds that they are higher now than at any time yet this year. Market reports for the last ten years also show, he says, that invariably good grain-fed cattle, especially yearlings, have sold for high prices through August, September and October of each year. He believes there is a suggestion in this circumstance that should be used to advantage by Minnesota farmers.

Professor Peters does not overlook the objections raised to the fattening of cattle on grain through the summer months. There is, of course, the difficulty of securing suitable feeder cattle in the spring. Ordinarily cattle on feed do not make good gains through the hot weather and fly season; also, all available labor on the farm is needed for farm-crops work through the summer season. But he believes it is possible to overcome these objections, and against them there is the great advantage of a high price for the finished product through the late summer and early fall months.

"Summer feeding," he says, "should perhaps be confined to yearlings or baby beeves, as it is the handy weight fat beefy carcass from the 1,000 to 1,200-pound steer that is in greatest demand through the summer and early fall By starting in with a group of good beefy calves in the fall when they are weaned and carrying them through the winter on alfalfa or clover hay and silage with a medium grain ration, not getting them on full feed until in April or May and then pushing them until sold in August or September, the feeding of such cattle can be accomplished economically. Many feeders of baby beef cattle would be money ahead had they carried cattle that were sold last May and June until now.

"By giving yearling cattle the run of a darkened, well-bedded shed during the daytime in summer, so as to protect them from the flies, and turning them out to a good grass pasture at night, at the same time keeping them in a full feed of grain, they will make almost as good gains as in winter. The labor of caring for them is also somewhat less and the usual higher price received for grain-fed cattle in late summer and early fall will more than make up the difference in the higher cost of labor and slower gains made."

Prejudice Against Heavy Lambs in Many Quarters

Of late years there has been a growing prejudice among consumers against heavy lambs. There is no doubt that the texture of meat of a large animal is coarser than that of a small one, but the difference is so slight that it would take a scientist to discover it.

The real trouble is that in certain quarters the word lamb has become rather elastic. It has been applied to sheep of all ages with the result that the consumer feels it safest to purchase the smallest specimens he can find and is usually willing to pay more for this kind.

In reality lambs are no exception to the general rule. Small animals of other classes are not usually preferred to large ones. There is no doubt that lamb properly grown up to 175 or 150 pounds' weight is better food than the same lamb marketed at 90 or 100 pounds. At the latter weight he should be consumed without any waste.

Sometimes the heavier breeds are marketed in an unfinished condition for the purpose of keeping the weight within what is considered the margin of safety. This practice should be discouraged for the quality of meat produced must certainly be of a low class.

The way to overcome the difficulty with lambs of heavy breeds is to begin to feed them for market a couple of months younger than is necessary with the smaller breeds.

Question of Labor in Considering Fall Pigs

If fall pigs are being considered, the question of labor arises. They might perhaps require a board or two nailed over the cracks in the old hoghouse, or a little more bedding and a little more energy spent occasionally in seeing that their wants are properly supplied. But those items are well taken care of as labor at that time of the year, viz., late fall and winter, is forced by nature to take things more or less easy.

Manner of Controlling Principal Insect Pests

Hog lice, mange, mites and fleas are the principal insect pests of the hog. For lice and mange rubbing posts or oiled wallows will usually give relief. The fleas are often troublesome in breeding houses and open sheds in early spring. Clean out all bedding and spray with coal oil or stock dip. Repeat at intervals of a week until the pest is completely controlled.
