LOSING MONEY

One of the most pathetic phases of modern life is the way a lot of people will strain and strive to save money and lose it in foolish investments. They have denied themselves the comforts of life in many cases, working long hours and carrying burdens of anxiety. As the result of all this effort and privation, they finally approach old age with a little reserve which they hope will see them through until the curtain falls. Then they invest this hard earned money unwisely, and soon find that their little capital has gone up in some hazardous speculation.

Many people need this warning, even when they are dealing with folks who are entirely honest and square.

There are a lot of very excellent pople who conceive the idea that they could succeed in business if they could but collect a little capital and open up a store or shop. Such folks frequently persuade their relatives and friends to put a good share of their small savings into such enterprises.

But the path of business is strewn with many wrecks. A person needs to know his trade thoroughly, to be industrious, courteous, enterprising, and have good judgment. A man may do his best, and fail through lack of some one of the necessary qualities.

A losing business eats up money fast. Hard earned savings accumulated over a period of years, will often disappear in a few months in an unsuccessful enterprise. Elderly people of small means ought not to take the commercial risks that may be perfectly legitimate for those of a more youthful age, or those who can afford to lose something. People of small means should ask advice of the wisest business men they know before investing money. It is said to be harder to keep money after you get it than it is to earn it.

REJUVENATION

For centuries it has been the dream of mankind to preserve the vigor of youth. Since the dawn of history alchemists and astrologers have worked on this problem. Human nature grieves bitterly at the loss of early strength, and would give all its treasure to get back its blessings.

Keen interest was expressed at the recent surgical congress at Paris, in the experiments in "gland grafting," which undertake to introduce new principles of vitality into the human system. It was stated at this meeting that 44 such operations had been performed by four surgeons, and all with beneficial results.

If worn out and tired bodies can be thus given renewed life, it will be a marvellous discovery. But people should remember that they can do much themselves to preserve youth, by healthful exercise and attention to the plain laws of health.

ABILITY TO DRIVE AUTOMOBILES

It is sometimes said that any person of medium intelligence who is in good health and possession of his faculties can learn to drive an automobile, yet many such people have tried it and given it up. Some women whose husbands drive their car have made an effort to learn, but have not come out well. In some moment of confusion they have perhaps run into something, and have become panicky whenever they attempt to operate a machine.

Such women, and some men are the same way, will get nervous if they see a farmer's buggy or a boy on a bicycle several hundred yards ahead. They are all a-flutter, as they ask what they shall do, and what the person ahead is going to do. They perhaps begin tooting their horns so long before passing that the driver ahead scarcely pays attention by the time they reach him. If they get into a tight place, their wits may leave them altogether.

It is quite trying to middle aged and elderly people of this type, to see boys and girls coming down the street with their cars, driving with perfect coolness and self possession, and apparently able to cope with any situation. It gives the older people a sense of failure to find themselves unable to do things that young folks do so easily.

It does require more self control and presence of mind to drive cars now than it did 10 years ago, particularly in or near crowded cities. A lot of these nervous people could learn to drive, if they would go at it in the right way, and practice under a good instructor.

But there are people of a highly nervous temperament, who are not fitted to drive at all, and they would promote their own and the public safety by "letting George do it."

THE COLLEGES AND LIQUOR

There have always been complaints that many college students used liquor freely, and they have not ceased under prohibition. A college is in a position where it can control pretty well the habits of its students. College authorities should be strict in this matter, and no doubt the majority of them are.

The colleges are supposed to train young men to be the intellectual leaders of the nation. But if a lot of these young men are breaking the law while taking this training, they are getting a poor fit for leadership. Students who can not get along without such violation of law do not show themselves worthy of the benefits of college life, and should be invited to transfer themselves to other activities.

THE PEOPLE'S MISTAKES

The people often do ill considered things, and then blame their public officers for conditions that result from the popular choice.

In a few weeks now the new congress will assemble. The people who watch the ways of congresses are not wholly hopeful of results.

If a Congress had been elected that was pledged to support the principles of the Republican administration, that administration would be responsible for results. The new Congress to be sure is nominally Republican.

But the Republican majority is a very narrow one, and a considerable number of men who call themselves Republicans are not much in sympathy with the bulk of their party, and they owe allegiance to insurgent movements. Much of the time during the coming session may be given to wrangling between the various groups, and it is not clear that the administration can realy a majority to support its plans,

It is a pretty good idea, unless a presidential administration has done something all wrong, to elect congressmen who will work harmoniously with that administration. Where the president and his cabinet take one point of view, and the majority of congress are against that line of action, then the chances of getting good laws passed are not favorable.

It is to be hoped that all factions of Republicans will agree on some program of compromise which they can unite to put through, even if it does not fully satisfy either faction. But if Congress should get into a grand wrangle, and fail to accomplish much, the responsibility will come back on the people who elected representatives who could not work harmoniously with a Republican president and cabinet who are earnestly trying to serve the people.

STREET SIGNS

Many cities and towns are poorly provided with street signs. The people have the idea that the residents all know what the streets are, and visitors are not much considered. Consequently strangers are a good deal puzzled to find their way.

It is customary in many cities to place signs at intersecting streets, but the city fathers assume that everyone knows the name of the leading avenues, and no markers are placed on them. This is bewildering to strangers. Also newcomers could find their way around better if the streets were all well marked.

Well maintained signs in large letters on ali street corners are one of the signs of the progressive city. They make strangers feel that their comfort and convenience are looked after.

RUN DOWN NEIGHBORHOODS

Many attractive cities and towns will yet have some neighborhoods that are kept in a rundown condition. There people crowd into poorly kept dwellings and general disorder and decadence prevail. Many newly arrived aliens live in such conditions, which are a barrier to Americanization.

It is pretty hard for folks to grow up to good citizenship in such surroundings. It breaks down a person's courage and self respect. It may be said that these folks could not ordinarily pay the higher rents that improved dwellings would cost. Yet if you give a man a neat little home, it is an incentive for him to brace up and do his best to pay for it. People who own run down property can do a wonderful stroke for the community if they will improve it, and offer inducements to tenants to keep it in good condition.

MODERN "HIKING"

Modern youth has discovered a new way of getting around the country. Instead of buying a railroad ticket with hard earned savings, the youngsters get out on a main road and beg rides from automobiles. They call it a "hiking" or "bumming" tour, but they may ride 50 miles for every one they walk.

It is not always so easy to do this as these young fellows think. The custom of begging rides has become so common among boys in many places that motorists scarcely notice such requests. Many schoolboys have become so indolent that they will ask for rides just to go half a mile.

Some of these fellows says that the secret of getting these rides is in being well dressed, that many drivers would stop for a good appearing fellow who would not do so for others.

A considerable number of young men who have no money for traveling have made their way in this manner this fall to colleges and schools where they desired to take courses. It has been a pleasure to many automobile owners to take these fellows in for such an ambitious errand.

Some parents dislike to have their boys go out and ask for rides in this way, as it seems to them like a form of begging. Yet it costs the driver nothing, and some automobile owners travelling alone are glad to have company. The worst feature of it is that bandits take advantage of this good nature, and have held up many drivers and stripped them of their money.

This ability to beg rides has given many young men very independent ideas, and they feel that they can get around the country and go long distances without having to pay much for it. It is one of those things that may be so much overdone that motorists will generally get tired of it, and decide that these "hikers" would better pay railroad fare or buy their own gasoline.

THE READING HABIT

There are many people who give the impression that they are well educated, yet who never had good school advantages. People frequently ask them, "What college did you attend?" taking it for granted that they have had the benefit of the higher education. They have, but their advantages were found in the school of self help.

People of that type have almost always been folks who have cultivated the reading habit. They have not merely read the wonderful range of information to be found in a good newspaper, but they are faithful patrons of reading rooms and libraries. If they do not have convenient access to such institutions, they find plenty of other ways to get books and magazines.

Circulating libraries offer books for very low rates, and they can be sent anywhere through the mails for small expense. Many people arrange book and magazine clubs with their neighbors, and thus get the chance to read up-to-date literature for a trifling sum.

Good literature is about the cheapest thing offered the public. Standard classical works are offered at amazingly low prices, and for the cost of an evening's entertainment, one can secure a good sized collection of masterpieces whose thought has stirred the world.

If people would spend a fraction of the amount they use on luxuries, on the purchase of good books and magazines, they would have the cream of the world's literature in their homes.

The world's wisdom is found in books, and a person does not have to go to any college to find the volumes that contain the cream of human knowledge and experience. The person who reads good books and follows the movements of the times has gone far along the path of education.

According to the "wise" ones (like you) Ford would never be able to sell a thousand cars a year; now look at him, he makes 1,600 every day—or is it every hour.
