Deterioration of Wheat.

The San Francisco Post recently published an article [illegible]

It is an open secret that the wheat raised upon some of the great farms in California is rapidly deteriorating in quality, and if the causes of impoverishing the soil does not speedily change, there will be a marked difference in the price between wheat of old and new lands. Diversified farming can alone arrest this process, and this is impossible only on small farms or on farms owned by men of large ready means.

E. H. Walker, the statistician of the Produce Exchange, says the N. Y. Tribune of the 18th ult., [illegible] yesterday that this statement need create no alarm as to the country's supply of wheat, either for consumption or export, as the deterioration of the California crop would have no material effect except in the return to the farmer. The wheat kernel would not be quite as full, and hence would not make so large a percentage of flour; but the loss by shrinkage would not be greater than a pound in a bushel. The cause of this deterioration he attributes to the impoverishing of the land by growing upon the same land, year after year, the same kind of crop, without the aid of fertilizers. The same system is practiced to a large extent in the Northwest lands, and the richness is taken from the soil [illegible] rotation of crops, or if fertilizers were used, the soil would be kept in good condition; but the farmer, anxious to make every cent possible, spares every item of expense. This was the cause of the deterioration of the lands in New England and in [illegible] but now the farmers practice either a rotation of crops or "summer fallowing"; in other words, let the land lie over one season, or sow clover, and when it has attained its summer growth plough it in for fertilizing. The wheat crop of the United States last year was about 448,000,000 bushels, of which California and Oregon furnished about 31,000,000 bushels. The surplus amounted to about 200,000,000 bushels, of which about 180,000,000 bushels were exported to other parts of the world, California and Oregon furnishing about 23,500,000 bushels, which were exported to the East Indies, China, Japan, Australia, and the Sandwich Islands. Mr. Walker stated that the estimated wheat crop of the United States for 1881 was about 480,000,000 bushels, of which California and Oregon would furnish between 30,000,000 and 35,000,000 bushels. Of this amount California and Oregon would require for seed about 1,500,000 bushels, and for consumption, for [illegible] 000,000 inhabitants, 4,000,000 bushels. For the rest of the United States there would be required about 55,000,000 bushels for seed, and 200,000,000 bushels for the population of about 50,000,000 of people. This would make a total of about 280,000,000 bushels for food and seed, leaving a surplus of 200,000,000 for export.

The average yield an acre, according to Mr. Walker's estimate, is 13 bushels, while the English farmer secures about 28 bushels an acre, simply from the free use of fertilizers. Mr. Walker stated that in Genessee county and other parts of this State, where years ago the farmers obtained as much as 30 bushels an acre, they now get from 12 to 14 bushels only.

Clover as a Recuperator.

We make the following extract from Dr. Hamilton's "Farming [illegible] Manures," as published in the Country Gentleman:

It is a very common practice among agricultural writers to advise all persons having large farms which are in a very poor condition to sell one-half or two-thirds of their land, and apply the money they receive in improving and improving the balance of their property.

[illegible] be the proper course to follow, but as a general rule, I am opposed to this advice, for two very good reasons.

1. You can get very little per acre for your poor fields, and, secondly, if you improve your property with the money, you can enhance its value so rapidly that in seven or eight years it will be worth double or treble its former value.

To begin your improvement, take the old field about half a mile from the house, and which is now covered with thin yellow grass and [illegible] deep, [illegible] years ago [illegible] the w[illegible]

It [illegible] is. And so be you to do not plow it now at the beginning of your efforts to make it better. Let the show you what a coating of fine hellow earth is worth upon the surface.

In Egypt, the annual overflow of the Nile deposits on the land a thin stratum of very fine soil, which amounts to only four or five inches in a century. This yearly settling, which is only the twentieth of an inch in thickness, of almost impalpable dust, keeps the farms forever rich and productive. The Egyptians do not plow this precious [illegible] but sow the seed on the moist ground, as the waters subside, and then, if possible they drive sheep and hogs or goats over it, to press the seed into the soil.

We should learn a useful lesson from their example and experience. We should not plow down the early part which the land has enriched by mangling and mixing with it for so many years; but early in the spring we should harrow as many acres of the old field as we can sow with clover seed, at one peck to the acre. After the seed is down we should roll the ground, and sow one or two bushels of plaster per acre.

The principal roots of all plants must be near the surface, that they may feel the life-giving influence of air and moisture, or the soil must be loosened by nature or by tillage that the atmosphere may penetrate even to the deepest fibres of vegetation. Hence the reason that plant food acts so well upon the surface, and that all seeds germinate more quickly, and [illegible] when covered only one or two inches of soil. But these truths must not be misunderstood. If the soil must be loose, the finer and greater the necessity, when planting or sowing, of pressing with the hand or foot or roller, the earth upon or [illegible] with the grain.

Well, to return to our old field. If the clover should grow [illegible] inches high by the middle of August, give it a half or a whole bushel more of plaster per acre. The second year you must treat it the same way; and if the clover is thin on the ground, sow more seed and again roll it well. Do all this the third and fourth year, if necessary. After this it will reseed itself, provided you continue the plaster each year.

Here is a practical illustration of this plan, which I know to be a fact.

A person bought a very poor farm near the Southern boundary of Pennsylvania, and tried to raise grain upon it in the usual way, but nothing grew large or strong enough to produce seed. Fortunately, he did not sacrifice the property by selling it at a very low figure as many would have done. He sown [illegible] acre of it with clover seed and plaster for every year. For a living he followed the occupation of an auctioneer, [illegible]

At best farm enough more years the clover grew, and he firmly undisturbed by clover or roof of any kind. Then he concluded to try his hand again at farming. Many of his neighbors gathered to see the first plowing, after an absence of 20 years from tillage.

An old farmer was present assured me that the soil turned over eight or nine inches deep, as black as your hat and as mellow as an ash heap.

[illegible] this was only three years ago, and the farm has the reputation of being rich and productive to the present day.

1880. Taxpayers Read Carefully.

The attention of all taxpayers who have not paid their taxes for 1880 is directed to

of the Revised Code of the public General Laws of the State of Maryland, wherein it is provided that "Every tax collector shall pay over the taxes within six months from the time he gets the books, and any tax collector who fails to do so shall be liable to prosecution and punishment."

The collector [illegible] the books on August 2, 1880. The six months will expire on February 2, 1881, and the collector has [illegible] his accounts he will be liable to the penalties prescribed in the law referred to.

The collector must carry out the law.

The Taxes for 1880.

and on and after that date the collector will be prepared to receive the taxes, and will allow the following discounts on both State and county taxes, WHEN PAID IN CASH.

On August Payments	5 per cent
On September Payments	4 "
On October Payments	3 "

Special Notice.

The attention of tax-payers is especially called to the provision of the new Code of Public General Laws, which says, emphatically, that the collector shall collect and pay over the taxes within six months after receiving the books, and in the event of a failure to do so, he shall be liable to prosecution and severe punishment.

This means that the collector, having received the tax books on the 3d of August, 1880, is ordered by law, by his oath of office and by the bond he has given for the faithful performance of his duty according to law, "to collect and pay over the taxes within six months," that is by the third day of February, 1881.

The collector has no discretion in the matter. Having accepted the office, he is bound to execute the duties in accordance with law, and he will therefore be obliged to collect by the summary process of distress or execution of all taxes that are unpaid on the third day of February, 1881; and notice is hereby given that all tax bills for taxes in arrear on the third day of February, 1881, will be collected at once by legal process.

Tax-payers should therefore take advantage of the provision to compute the amount of their taxes, and pay their taxes for 1880 before February 3, 1881, and thereby save costs, trouble, and insure happiness and prosperity.
