THE EASTON STAR

TUESDAY, MARCH 29, 1881.

T. K. ROBSON, Editor.

THE Baltimore & Ohio Railroad has bought of Col. McComb the Delaware Western road. Mr. Robert Garrett has been elected President of the Delaware Western company, and the Baltimore & Ohio has already commenced the work of building the new road from Baltimore to Philadelphia. So the Pennsylvania road will not own the single track between Baltimore and Philadelphia, notwithstanding P. W. & B.'s purchase.

States' Rights.

Is the Federal Union an absolute government, or do the States still retain their sovereign rights under the Constitution? This question was raised in last Thursday's Ledger, and it is most effectually answered by Major William E. Stewart in the very able communication which we publish this morning. We think the intelligent reader, after perusing his argument, will see very plainly that "States' Rights" are not an "abstraction," and that they have not lost their "practical significance."

IT now appears from the Gazette that "old John Brown" was the negro slave that Phil Floyd was suspected of assisting to run off just before the war! As old John Brown "lay slumbering in the grave" at that time, having been executed in Virginia, it is very apparent that Phil was innocent of that sin. And not until the Gazette revealed the fact was it known that Old John Brown was a negro slave. Ah! it won't do, Phil. was a Democrat, and hence the aspersion of his character. Had he been a Republican, his politics would have covered a multitude of sins, and he might have been buried in peace.

IT is said the President has made a very indifferent hit, in appointing Mr. Robert H. Hitt Assistant Secretary of State. He is very superficial, an indifferent French scholar, and wholly unfitted to succeed Mr. John Hay, in dealing with the important and varied interests of the State department. He has very little education; was a Chicago Tribune reporter; was private secretary to the late Senator Morton; made a rich marriage, and has since been attached to the American legation at Paris. There is really nothing in him, and it is a burlesque on statesmanship to appoint such a man Assistant Secretary of State.

What is Conkling Going to do About it?

Last Wednesday President Garfield sent to the Senate the name of Judge William H. Robertson, Conkling's deadliest foe, to be collector of the port of New York city. This appointment was a surprise to the New York Senators. It is considered the work of Blaine, and is intended to make an issue at once. Judge Robertson is the man that headed the bolt in the New York delegation at Chicago that smashed the Conkling Grant machine and nominated Garfield. Judge Robertson is eminently qualified for the position. He is the ablest of the anti Conkling men in New York, and will be expected to run the Custom house against the Senator. What is Mr. Conkling going to do about it? is the question that everybody is asking. Will he, or can he defeat the confirmation of Robertson?

THAT BOMB.

The Baltimore American has for some time past been engaged in the manufacture of a "bomb" for Governor Hamilton, which the Nihilists are expected soon to explode and disintergrate the Democratic party. The American has manufactured and exploded a great many bombs in its time, intended to destroy the Democratic party, but thus far none of them has done much harm. Its first attempt in the bomb manufacturing business was a Whig bomb, but that bursted up its own party, and left it dangling in the air, while the Democratic party remained on foundations as solid as Maryland granite. It then got up a Know Nothing bomb, but its explosion did the Democrats no harm, but came near ruining Baltimore city, and destoying all of the American's rich patrons. It next got up a Union bomb, but that was an old time affair, that all soldiers were familiar with, and it hurt nobody. It then tried its hand on a little secession bomb, but Ben Butler put his paws on the manufacturer, and the American destroyed without completing it. It next got up its great Republican bomb, and while the war lasted it was immensely effective; but it collapsed under "a free ballot and a fair count," and soon the dead Democrats came to life and swarmed throughout the State thicker than ever. The American then consorted with old Frank Thomas and others and tried to get up a military coersion bomb, but somehow the fuse would not work, and it was never fired off. It was more of a rocket, and shed its blast only about the American office. Then it made a great Potato Bug bomb, which was to send death and destruction throughout the Democratic camp, but it unfortunately fizzled out harmless. Since then the American has been in a quandary, not knowing whether to try its hand on another, or to go out of the bomb business. But inventors are a most tenacious set, and once into the bomb business, it was hard for the American to get out of it. The Governor Hamilton bomb is its latest announcement, and it has been working on it so long, and like Edison and his electric lamp, has made so much fuss over it, and spilt so much printers' ink about it, that people would be inclined to believe there was something in it, had not the American's previous bombs proved such wretched failures. It is to be hoped Gov. Hamilton will telegraph the American his permission to explode the thing, and let the world have the benefit of the boomerang. Gov. Hamilton has stood up unhurt against all the bombs the American has exploded in the last thirty years, as has also the Democratic party, and no doubt they can stand the coming bomb; the Democratic party can, whether Governor Hamilton can or not. The Democrats of Maryland are not going to disintergrate the Democratic party, and hand the State over to the tender mercies of the Republicans, for any man, no matter how many bombs he may fling. The Democratic party of Maryland is here, and here it means to stay. Its natural home is in Maryland, where its principles are indiginous, and in Maryland it will maintain them. Let the bombs fly; old soldiers are not afraid of them. The Democrats have seen them fly from the American office many, many times before, and heard their harmless tunes, and they are not afraid. They may fly thick and fast, but the Democratic party is not going to give up the ship, and the American need not expect to capture her.

STATES' RIGHTS.

It is asserted by some that the "hammer of war destroyed States' Rights;" and, "if there be any abstraction that has lost all practical signification, it is the doctrine of States' Rights."

We profess to be governed by a Constitution of limited powers; since the war several amendments have been incorporated into this Constitution; the war abolished slavery and caused the new amendments, and settled the long mooted question of the right of secession. With these exceptions the Government of the United States is the same as before the war. And we here assert that Rights of the States are by the Constitution as it exists to day, all in full force, and if States' Rights be obliterated from the present Constitution, we have no Government. There has always existed in the United States two classes of men, with widely different views of the nature of our Government. Alexander Hamilton and Thomas Jefferson were the exponents of these respective views. Hamilton having been raised in one of the West India Island, subject to Great Britain, was a great admirer of the British form of Government. He was in favor of electing the President for life, as also the Senators, forming a sort of aristocracy here in the republic. Thos. Jefferson was in favor of the people ruling, electing the President every four years, and of electing the Senators. Alexander Hamilton was for a strong centralized government. Thos. Jefferson was for the rights of the States, and for restricting the Federal Government. In other words Hamilton was for making a paternal government, and Jefferson was for one of the people.

Hamilton's idea was, that if the President and the Senators and the various officers were honest and high minded men, that then the government would succeed the best and the people would be happier. Jefferson's idea was, to educate the people, make them intelligent and virtuous, and then you would have good officers and a prosperous country. One was for beginning at the top and coming down, the other was for beginning at the bottom and building up. And from that time "til the present the same opinions prevail.

The Democratic party is and always has been a State's rights party; the various parties that have arrayed themselves in opposition to it have all been tinctured with the opinions of Alexander Hamilton and for a strong National Government. The Democratic party, faithful to the supremacy of the Constitution, construes that grand charter upon its express words, Art. 10, amendments adopted in 1791. The powers not delegated to the United States by the Constitution nor prohibited by it to the States, are reserved to the States respectively or to the people. The Democratic party accepts the amendments as a final settlement of the controversies that engendered Civil War, but it affirms its faith in the entire Constitution.

The Jeffersonian doctrine of States' Rights triumphed and the country prospered until 1860; the party then on side issues divided, (although both wings, Douglas' and Breckenridge's, were faithful to this cardinal principle). In that year the Republican party, starting on a sectional issue, elected its President on account of the division of the Democratic party, although at that time, if the party had been united it would have elected its President, because Mr. Lincoln received but one million eight hundred and sixty six thousand three hundred and fifty-two votes, whereas Douglas and Breckenridge together received two million two hundred and twenty-two thousands six hundred and seventy-one votes. In other words, the two Democratic candidates received three hundred and fifty six thousand three hundred and nineteen votes more than Mr. Lincoln.

The Democratic party from 1860 to the present time has kept up its organization, constantly fighting for its principles; it has been defeated and cheated, it has been out of power for twenty years, it has had to contend against enormous sums levied on over a hundred thousand office-holders, but it still lives and still increases and it still affirms the great doctrine of States' Rights. It enunciated this principle in its platform at St. Louis in 1876, and the Republican party proclaimed the opposite; that is, that the United States is a Nation, in its platform of 1876. The contending forces went to battle on this important issue, and despite power, money and patronage Tilden received four million two hundred and eighty-four thousand seven hundred and fifty seven votes and Hayes only four million, thirty three thousand nine hundred and fifty votes. Thus Tilden and States' Rights received two hundred and fifty thousand eight hundred and seven votes more than did Hayes and his principle of a centralized Nation.

But in 1880 the Democratic party is in the ranks again and marshals its millions for the contest, not at all dismayed. In its platform it boldly re-asserts the doctrine of States' Rights and opposition to centralization, and the Republican party still clings to its favorite dogma of a Sovereign Nation and inserts it in its platform. When the contest is over we find that a majority of the voters of these United States were true to the Democratic faith and Hancock received more votes than Garfield, nearly four millions and a half of Democrats voting for States' Rights in 1880. Not dead yet we say. The doctrine of Local Self Government, States' Rights, is very dear to intelligent men; it will always be so. Hence the Democratic party will always be a power in the land.

Strike out States' Rights wherever it appears in the Constitution of the United States, and it is a senseless thing; the Rights of the States appear in Art. 1, Sec. 2 six times, in Sec. 3 five times, in Sec. 4 twice, Sec. 8 three times, Sec. 9 twice, and Sec. 10 five times; in Art. 2, Sec. 1 twice, Sec. 2 once; Art. 3, Sec. 2 five times, Sec. 3 three times, Sec. 4 once; Art. 5, 6 and 7 proclaim the doctrine.

The amendments to the Constitution from 1st to 11th all limit the power of the Federal Government, and amendments 11, 12, 13, and 14 all mention States' Rights. You cannot abrogate States' Rights and have the Constitution as it was framed by the Fathers and as it reads to day; the doctrine is woven, all through the charter, and it is a dear principle to a lover of the Constitutional Union. Without the Constitution the Union is not worth a farthing. With the Constitution ours is a grand country, a Federal Union, a sovereign nation of sovereign States. Pure Democracies have risen and fallen; Utopian systems of Government have been produced; Plato had a Republic; Rome and Athens were Democratic Republics, but the perfection of wisdom founded our Federal Republic, and it is its chief feature that it is a dual Government, each sovereign; the Federal Government limited by the Constitution of the Union and the State Governments limited by the State Constitutions. Congress can do nothing but what the Constitution allows; the State Legislature can do everything that the State and the Federal Constitutions do not prohibit. The founders of the Constitution and the Republic knew what States' Rights meant. Maryland was a sovereign State before there was an Union or Constitution. She as a State gave certain of her inherent rights to the Federal Government to form a more perfect Union, but she gave these powers as expressed in the Constitution and emphasized in amendment 10, namely, the powers not delegated to the United States are reserved to the States respectively or to the people. States' Rights were announced and enforced by the wisest interpreters of the Constitution. It was the doctrine of Jefferson, of Madison, of Jackson. It is the doctrine of the Democratic party; it is the doctrine of the majority of the people of these United States as expressed at the polls in the Presidential election of 1876 and 1880; and in four years more the Government will be controlled by Democrats, the wild theory of a national, concentrated centralized paternal government will be done away with, and the government will be coaxed back into the base of its prescribed authority and kept there by the seal of the Constitution. Some say the "war has changed the character of the Government," "that the arbitrament of arms has decided the doctrine of States' Rights, and that there is no arguing down cannon balls." I deny this, and for reasons here quote the decisions of the Supreme Court of the United States, the highest Judicial authority, the Constitutional interpreter of the Constitution; a decision rendered in 1871, long after the arbitrament of the sword," long after all the amendments of the Constitution were adopted; a decision given on the Constitution as it exists at this present time, and pronounced by a nearly unanimous court, only one Judge dissenting and he not denying the doctrine of States' Rights. I quote only a portion of the decision, but the entire opinion is full of wise States' Rights doctrine of the kind that finds recognition among the people. Judge Clifford, of Maine, one of the Judges of the United States Supreme Court, first decided the case on his circuit. (It is the case of Buffington vs. Day.) Judge Clifford gave judgement for Day upon the express ground that Congress could not interfere with the necessary agencies for legitimate purposes of State government; and that the State within the limits of its reserved powers is wholly independent of Federal control. He says the Federal Government was the creature of the States; counties and cities were created by the States, but the States were not created by the United States, as the States existed as independent sovereignties before the Union was formed and they continued to be such from the Declaration of independence, and are such to-day, except so far as they have given some of their sovereignty to the Federal Constitution. The settled construction of the Government of the United States is one of limited powers as shown to demonstration by Amendment 10 of the Constitution. This fundamental principle underlies the entire frame work of the Government at this time. Judge Clifford says most of the powers conferred upon the Government of the United States are exclusive and it is unquestionably true that the national government in the exercise of those powers is supreme; but it is equally true that powers not delegated to the United States by the Constitution, nor prohibited by it to the States, are reserved to the States respectively; and it follows that the States in the exercise of such powers as are not delegated to the United States and are reserved to them are also supreme. Exclusive power possessed by the United States cannot be exercised by the States, nor can the exclusive powers possessed by the States be exercised by the Federal Government. They are in these respects, though exercising jurisdiction within the same territorial limits, separate and distinct sovereignties, acting separately and independently of each other in their respective spheres, just as fully as "if a line of division was traced by landmarks and monuments visible to the eye;" and he refers to cases decided in the Supreme Court of the United States confirming his decision: Ableman vs. Booth, 21 How.; McCullough vs. Maryland, 4 Wheat.; Austin vs. The Alderman, 7 Wallace.

As before stated Judge Clifford's opinion is sustained in the Supreme Court; the opinion was delivered by Justice Nelson. Speaking for the Court he says: "It is a familiar rule of construction of the Constitution of the Union that the sovereign powers vested in the State Governments by their respective Constitutions remain unaltered and unimpared except so far as they were granted to the Government of the United States.

"That the intention of the framers of the Constitution in this respect might not be misunderstood this rule of interpretation is expressly declared in the Tenth article of the Amendments, namely, "The powers not delegated to the United States are reserved to the States respectively or to the people.

"The Government of the United States therefore can claim no powers which are not granted to it by the Constitution, and the powers actually granted must be such as are expressly given or given by necessary implication. The General Government and the States, although both exist within the same territorial limits, are separate and distinct sovereignties, acting separately and independently of each other within their respective spheres.

"The former in its appropriate sphere is supreme, but the States within the limits of their powers not granted or in the language of the 10th Amendment, "reserved," are as independent of the General Government as that Government within its sphere is independent of the States."

So the Democratic party is not only endorsed by the Constitution, by the popular vote, but by the Supreme Court in maintaining the Rights of the States. Democrats must believe in, insist upon, and heartily cherish the true doctrine of States' Rights.

Ours is a Constitutional Union of sovereign States. The Constitution and the Union go together. States' Rights and a strict construction are cardinal principles, and if the great charter of our government is wisely carried out, this country will prosper and its citizens will continue to be freemen of the greatest country beneath the sun.

W. E. STEWART.

THE President has re-nominated Stanley Matthews for Justice of the Supreme Court, and it is said that both the New York Senators will vote against him to spite Mr. Garfield for taking a flank movement of them in the appointment of Judge Robertson collector of the port of New York.

The Buckeye Harvester and Self-Binder is constantly surrounded by great crowds of farmers, eager to see it bind large or small bundles without change of tension, everybody noting how lightly and smoothly it runs, and that it does its work, with the precision of clock work, with no complicated machinery to get out of order and bother and delay the farmer, who is not supposed to be a skilled mechanic, but goes right along through harvest after harvest, doing its work as well or better than any machine made or sold in the United States.—State Journal, Springfield, Ill.
