THE EASTON STAR

T. E. ROBSON, Editor.

The Convention to be Held 23d of June.

The Democratic State Central Committee met in Baltimore on Thursday, and passed the following resolution, fixing the 23d day of June as the time for holding the State convention to nominate a candidate for comtroller. It also appointed a sub-committee to issue an address to the voters of the State on the issues of the coming campaign in accordance with the usage of the party; said committee consisting of Hon. A. P. Gorman, and Edward Warfield, of Howard county; Edward W. Mealy, of Washington county; Dr. George W. Bishop, of Worcester county; Dr. F. T. Shaw, of Carroll county; and Dr. George H. Cairness, of Baltimore county.

RESOLUTION.

"Resolved, That it be, and is hereby, recommended to the democratic conservative voters of the State to assemble in primary meetings, in their respective counties and the legislative districts of Baltimore city, for the purpose of appointing delegates equal in number to their representation in both branches of the next Legislature to a State convention, to assemble at Baltimore on the 23d of June, in the year 1881, which convention shall nominate a candidate for the office of comptroller of the State treasury."

The colored Republican voters of North Carolina have lately held a State Convention at Raleigh, and resolved emphatically, that they are tired of furnishing all of the Republican voters of that State, while a few white Republicans get all of the Federal offices. They appointed a committee of fifteen of the leading men of their own color, to proceed to Washington and lay thier grievances before the President. They took good care to hint pretty strongly, that if they did not get their share of the offices hereafter, they should vote as they pleased, and send the Republican party up the spout. The same spirit prevails among the colored republican voters of the other Southern States. They are dissatisfied at having to do all the voting while a few white Republicans get get all the offices, and are in open rebellion against continuing any longer such an unjust state of affairs. The same spirit is cropping out among the colored Republican voters of Maryland. The white Republicans make the nominations, and take care to nominate themselves, and the colored men are expected to furnish the voters to elect them. Precious few of the offices are given to the colored men, who furnish nearly all the votes the Republican party cast at the elections. The colored men are sensible of the injustice of such a regulation, and if their right to a fair proportion of the honors and offices is not granted them, they will bolt the nominations. It is a good sign to see the colored voters manifesting such a commendable spirit of independence. It is only by dividing their vote that they can compel the white Republicans to do them justice. When they see this important vote leaving them, they will grant any conditions to recover it.

Gen. Grant's Letter.

We think the grimmest sarcasm upon society we ever saw in so many lines, indeed the grimmest we ever saw at all, was upon Thackeray's "Vanity Fair," where the reviewer uses these words: "'Vanity Fair' is a latter day Eden; the inhabitants are all once more in a Paradisiacal State, naked and not ashamed." And the sardonic epigram came back to us when we read Gen'l Grant's letter to Senator Jones, which having been published was written presumably for publication. Speaking of Garfield's New York nominations he says: "But his nominations of the next day convinced me that the first act was but a part of a deep laid scheme by somebody to punish prominent leaders for being openly friendly to me."

"When he selects the most offensive man to be found (Robertson) it becomes an insult and ought to be resented to the bitter end.

"The change of Badeau and Cramer, the two appointments in which I felt a strong personal interest, was very distasteful to me; the first because of our personal relations, and my wish that he should be kept where his office would support him, etc., etc., (italics all our own).

We do not advert to the taste of the letter, any more than we do its grammar or its rhetoric. We cite it as an index of the utter degeneracy of our politics. A man who has been a leader of vast armies, and twice President of this great and honored Republic, to be writing a letter of peevish complaints about "me." He was virtually deadheaded through Europe and Asia; and was given a charity fund of $100,000. He was a candidate for a third term of the Presidency; and when fairly defeated, he openly charges upon the Presidential Administration an animus against "me." When he was President of the United States, he spake in a message to Congress of "my party."

Have we come to this? Has the highest place under our Government become a chattel, to higgle about? To this complexion have we come at last? Have the best instincts and energies and aspirations and traditions of one hundred years abrogated themselves to such base uses?

We do not believe it. For we regard Grant as but a circumstantial factor in a tendency that will be rebuked. The American people have their impulses and ideals; and they will not surrender them to the aspirations of the huckster in politics and patronage. This centennial year shall ere long become vocal with memories of Washington and Franklin and Henry. This is a fateful year for selfishness. The planets are in inauspicious conjunction. When the suns of October shall make the land blush to its fruitage, ingenuous pilgrimages shall set foot to a scene big with tradition. The glad acclaim of cannon; the flags of many nations; the bursts of noble anthems; the thrill of the orator; the high glow of the poet; the marble shaft to focalize all these; and the echoing shouts of thousands shall reaffirm the true import of our institutions. The demonstration itself will interpret its suggestive symbolism. Our origin as a People; our struggles in the wilderness; our Baptism of fire; our great gladness and glory at the birth of a New Republic; all these things will move the heart and brain. The grand inspirations of our monitors and prophets of old days will burn anew. We shall hear of the great trust the founders of our system gave to us, and the exceeding great responsibility of that trust. The heart of this mighty people will rise responsive to the new exigency. Then shall the betrayers of our people be seen aright. Self-seeking under whatever guise shall hide its head. No more shall our political speech be vitiated by a mongrel terminology. "Bossism," "Machine," "Third Term," "Patronage," "Mobilier," "Ring," "Bloody Shirt," "Mahoneism," shall lose their currency as they lose their definition. And finally, in the supreme moment, the people will rise and rescue the Government from rapacity and fraud; and once more steer the ship of State adrift of currents all redolent of their own rottenness.

Virginia All Right.

The town and county elections took place in Virginia last week for local officers. The Democrats made pretty much a clean sweep of the State, several Republican strongholds having been redeemed, and most of the Readjuster strongholds having thrown off the Mahone yoke and returned to the old Democratic fold.

No Show for Conkling.

There does not appear to be any probability of the re-election at Albany of the resigned New York Senators, Conkling and Platt, as up to Saturday night their friends in the New York Legislature had not been strong enough to call a legislative caucus. It is said that Conkling complains bitterly of having been enticed to go to Albany on a fool's errand.

Gov. HAMILTON held his grand pow wow in Baltimore Thursday night. His speech was a criticism of the management of the Treasury department of the State for the past seventeen years, making the Democratic party responsible for what the Republicans did while they ruled the State during and immediately after the war. No change has taken place in the management of our finances since 1879, and Gov. Hamilton must have been as familiar then as now with the affairs of the Treasury department, yet he said nothing against it in all the speeches he made in the campaign of 1879. In his report in 1879, Comptroller Keating urged as a just measure of reform the abrogation of the bounty system which had cost the State near $7,000,000; over $69,000 was paid during the last year of the system. Acting on the recommendation of Mr. Keating, the legislature of 1880 abolished the whole bounty system, thus saving the treasury untold thousands, yet Governor Hamilton gives neither the Comptroller nor the legislature credit for this great measure of reform. A Republican criticising a Democratic management of the Treasury could not have been more unfair. The truth of the matter is, Gov. Hamilton wants control of the Board of Public Works, and to compass that, he must first get rid of Comptroller Keating and Treasurer Compton; hence his tirade against the management of the State finances. And to make out his case he has undertaken to make the Democratic party responsible for the destruction of the sinking sund by the Republicans, and for the expensive bounty system and defense loans enacted by the Republicans, all of which we scout and denounce as unjust to the Democratic party. The Democratic party has sins enough of its own to bear without placing on its back the weight of the sins committed by the Republican party when in power in Maryland. It is a high compliment to the Democratic management of the State finances, for Gov. Hamilton to be compelled to rake up what the Republicans did when in power, in order to make out a case against it.

Bishop Lay in North Carolina.

We mentioned in our issue before the last, that Bishop Lay had gone to North Carolina, to preach a sermon in memory of the late Bishop Atkinson. The sermon was preached before the Protestant Episcopal Convention of North Carolina, in session at Raliegh. There were present, besides the large number of clergy and laity composing the convention, a very large congregation, composed of all denominations, who assembled to hear the memorial sermon. In speaking of the occasion and the sermon, the daily Raleigh News and Observer says: "On yesterday the convention devoted a part of the day to a memorial service commemorative of the late Bishop Atkinson. Bishop Lay, of Maryland, delivered a sermon in memory of the deceased bishp, and we but express the common feeling of all who were present in saying that it was at once the loftiest and most just tribute that they ever heard on any similar occasion. It was indeed a subject that might have inspired with unusual eloquence one even less gifted than Bishop Lay. The sermon and the occasion will long be remembered."

We copy the following account of the service from the first day's proceding of the Convention, published in the News and Observer of May 17th.

THE MEMORIAL SERVICE.

The convention assembled in Christ Church chapel at 10 o'clock a. m., and was called to order by Bishop Lyman.

After prayer a recess was taken for divine service.

The church was very tastefully decorated. Over the altar was a large cross of pure white roses, and the front was beautifully dressed with a profusion of flowers of many colors. The clergy in their robes marching in by the side door in procession two by two, formed lines on each side of the aisle, up which passed Bishop Lyman, accompanied by Bishop Lay, of Maryland. The clergy falling in behind in order, the procession passed around and into the chancel.

The services were remarkably impressive. The presence of all the clergy of the diocese and of the distinguished visiting clergy, the presence of so large a congregation gathered together from all parts of the State but added to the solemnity which the occasion had for all those who knew and loved the honored Bishop of whom the services were commemorative.

SERMON BY BISHOP LAY.

As the Rt. Rev. H. C. Lay rose to deliver the sermon in memory of the late Bishop Atkinson of this diocese, the congregation became hushed in attention. And throughout the whole of this interesting and eloquent sermon their attention was rapt, showing not only the power of the orator, but also how dear to his people is the memory of the good and noble man who for so many years was the beloved Bishop of this diocese.

The Rt. Rev. Bishop took his text from St. John, xx chapter, 21 and 22 verses, "Peter seeing him saith to Jesus, Lord and what shall this man do? Jesus saith unto him, If I will that he tarry till I come, what is that to thee? Follow thou me."

From the text the Rt. Rev. Bishop drew the lesson that although God in his providence had granted to Bishop Atkinson a long life and one singularly free from private trouble and domestic afflictions, that we must not suppose from that that he was free from care and pain. That his was a life of responsibility, which for one of his conscientiousness and sympathizing nature, could not but be one of much trouble and care for others. Passing on the gifted orator drew a most felicitous picture of the person and character of Bishop Atkinson. Consider him, he said, in his natural endowments and his personal gifts. How goodly a presence was his! A manly form, a noble head, a countenance in which intellectual power, strength of will and sweetness of temper were harmoniously combined, and were the more lovely for the singular absence of self consciousness. Strangers everywhere turned to look upon him as on a man, beyond doubt a chieftain in his proper sphere. The orator then drew a sketch of the family and life of the late Bishop, laying particular stress upon the great love which he always bore to those of his family, drawing illustrations from the Holy Scriptures to prove the Christian obligation to love, particularly those of our own kindred. He described his great tolerance and affection for his Christian brethren of other communions, never yielding an iota of what he believed to be the truth. Touching upon the Bishop's course in the many important occurrences of his career, he described his gentle but manly bearing, and the sweetness of temper and reasonableness with which he prevented acrimony from creeping into any of the discussions in which he took part. He described the Bishop's course in bringing about the reunion of the Southern and Northern churches after the civil war, and asserted that it was due to his manly and firm leadership that this reunion was brought about as soon as it was, without there being anything to offend the feelings of Southerners. He mentioned his great care for and sympathy with the colored race, and showed how earnestly he had striven for their intellectual and spiritual advance. In conclusion, he depicted in eloquent language the great patience and trust of the Bishop's closing days, and, describing the Bishop's character and bearing, closed his description with the following words: Whatever may have been his share of mortal weakness, even if I have the sagacity to dissect it, I dare not dissect in search of flaw a soul so just and guileless. Of one thing I am well assured, that those who loved him best and knew him in his utmost reserve find no notes in the tablets of memory whereon his honored name is written which may not be perused without exciting a serious regret or causing a blush of shame. The Rt. Rev. Bishop closed his sermon with the following words: "And surely, surely we must be persuaded that the reward of a good bishop hereafter will be something signal and transcendant. The angels of the churches are represented in the book of Revelations as stars which the Son of Man carries in his right hand, and the elders are described as sitting around the Lord and His throne, clothed in white raiment, and having on their heads crowns of gold."

After the sermon the congregation partook of the Holy Communion.

The Buckeye Binder's Great Victory in Roumania.

For some time past the landed proprietors in the great grain districts of Roumania and Southern Russia have shown an intense desire for the introduction of successful binding machines. In order to determine upon the merits of the existing self-binders the Roumanian Ministry of Agriculture organized a trial at Bucharest on July 16th. This trial was intended to be, and was considered the most important event of this character which has ever occurred in South Eastern Europe. The result was telegraphed to the London Times, and was, the next day, sent by cable to, and published by the Associated Press of the United States. Never before has any agricultural machine made in the United States won such conspicuous and honorable attention the world over as the Buckeye Binder in this instance. The Times dispatch, which was sent to the New York Tribune, Herald, Sun, and all the great dailies was as follows:

"BUCHAREST, July 7, 1880.—At a recent trial of self-binding reaping machines on the grounds of the Agricultural College here, the following five makers were represented: Walter A. Wood, the Johnson Harvesting Machine Company, McCormick & Co., and Aultman & Co., of America, and the Howard Company of Bedford, England. The Aultman machine won the first prize, the machine of McCormick & Co. the second, and the machine of Walter A. Wood the third prize. The English machine met with an accident and had to cease operations. The first prize-winner cut and bound five acres* of wheat in four and a quarter hours. Mr. Lee, of Bucharest, has taken the agency of the Aultman machine, and has given an order for forty of them."

The Times reporter omitted to state that gold, silver and bronze medals were awarded, probably on the ground that the public would only care to know the classification of the in ddices reported by the jury. We, however, have no objection to stating that the certificate of the Buckeye Binder's victory by the Roumanian authorities was a graceful compliment in the shape of a GRAND GOLD MEDAL, which in due time was received, and may now be seen at the office of C. Aultman & Co., Canton.

Commenting on the above event, the New York Tribune says editorially:

"It was praiseworthy enterprise to see those American firms who sent their reaping machines to Buchrest, and delighted the Roumanian farmers by engaging in a competitive trial. The result was, naturally, large orders. If leading firms in some other branches of industry would display the same energy abroad as the implement makers, like success may be expected."

* The piece measured off for each machine to cut was, in fact, 5 Perpons, or about 6¼ acres, as perpons is about 1¼ acres. We may add this other incident, that the Wood and Johnston twine binders failed entirely to cut their allotted pieces, when, that in view of this failure, and of the pretense of the Wood agents that their piece was more difficult than the rest, the jury ordered the Buckeye to operate on the Wood piece which it did, showing that their pretense was without any foundation by doing the work just as perfectly as before, and to the great admiration of all who were present.
