—Saturday was another awful day for business, on account of the rain. The clerk of the weather appears to select Tuesdays and Saturdays for his rainy days. He must have a spite against our merchantile fraternity and marketers.

—Ex-Sheriff William Reddie has entered into an engagement with Messrs. Hubbard & Brother as general salesman for their Standard Fertilizer. Mr. Reddie has a large acquaintance in this and adjoining counties, and ought to make an efficient salesman.

—Wednesday was one the most disagreeable days of the present winter—snow, rain, and sleet. Thursday it moderaled, and Thursday evening there was a dense fog. It cleared off Thursday night, and Friday morning the weather was warm with a strong breeze from the northwest, which soon dried up the mud.

Thompson's residence; and the Commissioners of Easton will continue the work, if they can get the shells, until the Avenue is shelled to the depot.

—Messrs. L. Jeff Milbourne & Co., 128 Baltimore, have a well established advertising agency, and those who want advertising done through the newspapers, will find them prompt and thoroughly reliable. Persons out of this county, and especially in Baltimore, who may desire to use the advertising columns of the STAR to extend their business, can contract through Messes. Milbourne & Co., on just as good terms as they can obtain from this office. Jan10-2m.

—Mr. Joseph A. Baynard, engineer of the Delaware & Chesapeake Railway, met with a painful accident on Tuesday last, by a fall which he received at Hartley, the new station the Company are building on the line of their road. He placed a ladder on a goods box, to reach the roof, and the ladder broke when he was at the top of it. The fall bruised him badly, but we understand no bones were broken. He was taken in the cars to his home in Oxford, and we understand he is improving.

Personal.

Rev. Mr Larmour, of Trinity Chapel, Easton, preached at Princess Anne on Sunday, and Rev. Dr. Barber, of Cambridge, filled Mr. Larmour's pulpit Sunday morning. Bishop Lay has returned, and preached at Trinity Chapel Sunday afternoon, at 4 o'clock.

Mr. Frank H. Smith has returned from Florida somewhat improved in health.

School House Nearly Burnt.

On Wednesday night the school house near Mr. Robert H. Jump's, in Chapel district, took fire from the stove, burnt the floor through under the stove, and the ceiling joists through over it, and then went out. The house was not underpinned tinsh, and after the hole was burnt in the floor, there was plenty of air in the room, and it is a mystery how the fire went out, unless it was smothered out by the smoke.

Nella F. Brown.

The celebrated elocutionist, Miss Nella F. Brown (Mrs. Pond) made her second appearance in Easton Friday, in the Star Course of entertainments now in progress, at Music Hall. The large hall was packed full to hear her, and we do not think a single person was disappointed. She certainly excels any lady that has ever appeared in these parts on the stage. Her reading is faultless, and her mimicry and humor irresistible. She was repeatedly encored and responded twice, bringing down the house each time. Weber's Orchestra, from Baltimore, furnished the music, which was very fine. After the entertainment Mr. J. Frank Turner gave Miss Brown a reception, which was enjoyed by a number of our citizens.

Kinnamon, presented an account of sales. John W. Dawson, guardian of James R. Pratt, passed his guardian account. Mary E. Lecompt, guardian of her daughter Mary E. Lecompt, passed her 4th account.

COUNTY COMMISSIONERS.

On Tuesday the Commissioners approved the bonds of Thomas Hopkins and William Grace, constables. A petition was presented numerously signed, asking the Board to furnish 7,000 bushels of oyster shells, to shell a piece of public road at Skipton. A petition was also presented from citizens of Trappe, praying the Board to pay for $100 worth of oyster shells, to go on the public streets of Trappe. Both petitions were laid over for future action. A number of appeals were heard and transfers made. The hearing of appeals will continue some weeks longer. Several accounts were passed and paid. There were several bids for working the roads in Easton district, but the contract was not given out.

The record of the men who lived in Easton from forty to fifty years ago, commenced last week, become so extended, we had to defer the conclusion of it to this week.

Mr. Alexander Dodd, one of our most eminent men for true piety, was a blacksmith, and did business for many years at the corner of Dover and Harrison streets. He bought a farm in Trappe district and went to farming, and subsequently died in Baltimore.

Mr. Alexander Taylor was a merchant, and kept store at the stand where Ball, Shannahan & Grace do business.

Col. John Stevens was a member of the firm of Rhodes & Stevens. He was rich, and before his death, bought and presented to the Maryland Colonization Society an emigrant ship, to run between Baltimore and Africa, which cost $87,000.

Dr. Samuel Spencer practised medicine in town, and subsequently moved to Florida.

Richard A. Spencer was a lawyer. He was the author of the Talbot local public school law, passed in 1832-33. He emigrated South, and become a minister in the M. E. Church.

John Green was a great wit. He started the newspaper called the Easton Shore Whig and People's Advocate about the year 1832, and died soon afterwards.

Mr. William J. Roberts was a clerk in the county clerk's office. He is still living, but is unfortunately blind. Mr. Samuel Roberts, his father, lived at Mulberry Hill, and was superintendent of the Easton Silk Company. The Mulberry Hill farm was planted in Mulberry trees during the mulberry fever in 1837.

Mr. Scott Dawson kept a drug store where Dawson & Brother now keeps. He died young. The title of the firm was Thomas H. Dawson & Sons. The late Mr. Edward Dawson was in the firm. He was subsequently elected a book-keeper in the Easton bank, where he continued up to the time of his death.

Mr William H. Tilghman was for some time teller of the bank. He was somewhat lame.

William Clark was a noted merchant, but his career rather anti-dates the time of which we write.

John Goldsmith, a tailor, and Manlove Hazel, a preacher, went into the mercantile business together, but soon sold out. It was said they had a settlement of their partnership affairs every night. Mr Goldsmith was afterwards Collector of State taxes, and rode the county over about fifty times while doing his collecting.

Cornelius Clark was a noted orator. He was a carriage trimmer, and a powerful debater. He had a voice that could be heard half a mile. When he came here the young men had a lyceum, with Dr. C. C. Cox at the head of it. The Doctor got it up to air his own oratory. Clark joined it and never said a word until appointed on a debate against Dr. Cox. The first time he spoke he demolished the Doctor and the lyceum together, for the Doctor never attended afterwards, and there was no one else to pit against Mr. Clark.

James Benny was a watchmaker, and had his shop in a little frame building which stood where Mr. Goldsborough's book store stands. He had the reputation of being extremely indolent.

Josiah Clift was also a watchmaker, and emigrated South.

John Hull was an Irishman, and a plasterer by trade. He was a man of violent temper, and always carried a hatchet under his coat, and whoever said to him, "you think I don't know you with your black coats on," was sure to receive a blow from his hatchet. When Mr. Hull first came to this country, he encountered a nest of yellow jackets, which stung him furiously. He afterwards come across a nest of tumblebugs, and mistaking them for yellow jackets, he said, "faith, and ye think I don't know ye with your black coats on." The boys of the town hung up a paddy in front of the market house every St Patrick's day to annoy him; and whenever there was a paddy up, Mr. Hull did no work, but would walk the streets and grumble at the boys.

James Kersey was an oddity, and a printer by trade. He worked at the Gazette office, and was familiarly known about town as "Beans." He generally sat in summer weather on a bench in front of the Gazette office—where Linthicum keeps his hat store—and to all passers by who said, how are you Mr. Kersey, he answered "beans."

Old Natty Mullikin was a baker, an old genious, and a great talker. He left here and moved to Winchester, Virginia, where he got into a fight with another man, and his son, a youth, picking up a gun to help his father, blazed away, and killed Mr. Mullikin instead of the man he shot at.

Edward Hopkins was a house and sign painter. He did sign painting like an artist. He was the father of the late Samuel T. Hopkins, late clerk of the Circuit Court.

His brother, Wm. Henry Hopkins, was also a painter; but he at one time was engaged in the the mercantile business. He is still living at Hampton, Virginia.

Samnel Osmon was a cabinet maker. He was at one time in business with Mr. James S. Shanahan, who now lives on Tilghman's Island.

William Higgins was a saddler and did a large business. There was much more manufacturing done in Easton in those days than at present. The carriages, boots and shoes, harness and saddles used in the county were nearly all made here.

Joseph Carey was a noted character of those times. He came from Delaware—had one of his ears crapped, and used to keep the Whig coops.

John B. Fairbank was a wheelright. He retired from business, went to the Chapel to reside, and was there murdered by a man named Joe Millis. Millis ran off and was never arrested.

Mr. Benjamin Faulkner bought out John B. Fairbank, and carried on the same business up to the time of his death, about 1842.

William Porter was a very bright young mechanic, and a great talker, and a flaming Democrat. He bought out John W. Bell's interest in the carriage factory of Bell & Stewart. He died young.

Amos Davis was a blacksmith, and quite a character. He once went to Israel Carroll's oyster house and asked the charge for a mess of oysters. Israel said he could have all he could eat for 25 cents. Davis commenced and ate, and ate, and ate, until Israel commenced to cry; and if David had not been persuaded by his friends to stop, he would have eaten out all the old man had in his shop.

Edward Crisp started an oyster house in opposition to Israel Carroll. He was a lame man, but he never made an Irael Carroll bargain with Amos Davis.

Dr. C. C. Cox practiced medicine, wrote poetry, and dabled in politics. He was a bright literary character, a fluent speaker, and struggled to get at the head of the Whig party of Talbot, but never succeeded in obtaining office till the war, when he was elected Lieut. Governor of the State. He was medical purveyor of Baltimore during the war, subsequently moved to Washington, and is now in a lunatic asylum.

Charles White, or rather Charley White was the biggest liar in town. He used to tell as a fact, that he was caught in the third story of a burning building in Baltimore, and slid down to the ground on a stream of water that one of the famous Baltimore fire engines was playing on the fire. A dozen other equally fabulous stories he used to tell might be quoted.

Allen Goldsborough studied law in Col. Hambleton's office. He was a good talker but a poor speaker. In devilment of all kind he was always original and at the front. He died in Caroline county.

Mr. Robert Kennard was a gentleman of leisure. He was principally distinguished as the inventor of the Easton funks, which at one time were the terror of all assemblies in town, particularly debating societies.

Col. Horace Edmonson was also a gentleman of leisure and always looked as if he was fresh from a bandbox. He was a splendid piece of company.

Mr. James Willson was a merchant in town, and at one time was of the firm of Willson & Taylor. His son Robert Willson moved to Baltimore. He lived a bachelor and married late in life. On his wedding night there was a grand calathumpian serenade, and a ringing of the Court house bell.

John H. Harris was Register of Wills, succeeding Mr. James Price. Mr. Harris came to Easton from Georgetown, Delaware, and died on his farm opposite Cambridge.

Charles Guinn kept Dover bridge at one time, and came to town and rented the frame tavern.

Levin Guinn, his brother, was a carpenter, and built the cookoonery at Mulberry Hill, now used as the barn on Mrs. Pascault's farm.

Mr. Thomas Price, or, as he was familiarly called, General Price, was teller of the Easton bank. He was a bachelor, and a good fellow; but the most credulous of men. We have known Allen Goldsborough and Horace Edmondson, to make three four drinks off him of an evening by each taking a seat beside him, getting into a quarrel and rising to strike, the General rising at the same time, saying, "Come boys, none of this, lets take a drink; repeating the trick every time they got dry, and the General never seeing through the job. And this not one evening, but often.

Tom Maynard was an odd genious, and the laziest man in town. At one time he kept a Keno table at Sockum—on the New Bridge road. His place was called "Sockum University."

Mr. Henry Feddeman was a merchant in town, whom everybody liked. He died young.

Mr. Jno. Satterfield came here from Baltimore here in 1835 and opened a tailor's shop, and has been in business continuously ever since. Is there any one else in town who can say they have never moved their home in 47 years?

We were in error last week in saying the late James Lloyd Martin studied law with Gov. Thomas; he studied with Theodore Lockerman.

Miss Ellen Wright.

The wonderful impersonator, the last attraction upon the Star Course, will appear at Music Hall, Tuesday evening, February 21st. Speaking of her, the Boston Herald says:

"At the Academy of Music last night, the audience was one of the most select and appreciative of the season, and listened to an entertainment in every way worthy of it. Miss Wright is one of the most wonderful impersonators of the day. In her representations last evening, the audience lost sight of the artist, and thought only of the character represented. Every character seemed treated with equal facility. The transition from the ghastly death scene of Queen Katharine to the grim humor of Mrs. Pardiggle lost its sharp contrast in the ease with which it was effected."

Godey's Lady's Book for February

Is a sparkling number. The steel plate is a a beautiful sketch drawn by Darley, representing a scene in "The Cricket on the Hearth," and the novelette "Cherry Snows" is a thrilling love story from the pen of Carrie Beebe Crocker. The shorter stories, poems, Recipes, Puzzles, Games, etc., are all first-class, and the Fashion and Work Departments are replete with the very latest designs. Take it, all in all, this number is an exceptionably good one. We would suggest to those who do not take it that the Lady's Book would make a handsome present to your friend. Any of our readers can be supplied promptly, by leaving their orders at this office. We will furnish our own paper and Ladies's Book for the low price of $—— per annum. Now is a good time to send in your subscription. The publication office is 1006 Chestnut Street, Philadelphia, Pa.

Another Manufactory.

We learn from reliable sources that there is strong probability that before another year rolls around Easton will have added another manufactory to her already growing interests in that direction. This one is to be a manufactory of woolen goods, and all that it needs to insure success is that all the stock should be taken and the money thereby supplied. This is one of the best sections of the country for such a project, as this county produces a large quantity of wool which might as well be manufactured here, and this section have the benefit of it. We hope all our citizens who can will invest some of their means in it and make it a success. The starting of each new factory only lays the foundation for more, and as they increase so increases the material wealth of our people and county. Every institution that is added to our interests adds so many more people to be provided for in every way, and thus increases not only our wealth but our population. Let us do all in our power to promote such interests and thereby promote our own.

Developing the Eastern Shore.

Mr. Hampden P. Dashiell, of Princess Anne, Somerset county, Md., is in Baltimore securing the signatures of prominent business men to a petition in Congress requesting that a survey be made of the Manokin river, with a view to having it dredged and made navigable. A resolution recommending that a survey be made has already been presented to the Legislature by State Senator Brattan. The petition will be fathered in Congress by Hon. George W. Covington, member of the House of Representatives from the first district, or, if Mr. Covington, who is now sick, does not recover in time, by Senator James Black Groome. The petition is signed by all the leading citizens of Somerset county, including Hon. John W. Crisfield, Dr. Wm. H. Gale, E. G. Polk, H H. Dashiell, James U. Dennis and Henry Page. The Manokin is a tidewater river running almost entirely through Somerset county, receiving the drainage of a large portion of its territory, and has its outlet in Tangier sound, a part of the Chesapeake bay. It is navigable for twenty-five miles and up to Princess Anne, the county seat, except where it is interrupted at two or three points, by the accumulation of sediment, which is believed could be easily removed. For the most part the land on both sides of the river is fertile and productile, and if vessels could go up as far as Princess Anne the whole county would be greatly benefitted. Many old homesteads which flourished in grand style before the war are on the river, and all that is now needed to infuse new life into the people is a convenient and cheap way for them to send the products of the soil to a good market. All this trade will come to Baltimore if an effort is made to bring it here. It will be remembered that the Maryland Steamboat Company, General Howard B. Ensign, president, woke up Wicomico county, which adjoins Somerset, by running a line of steamers to Salisbury last summer. The success which has rewarded General Ensign's enterprise shows very plainly how capable of development the Eastern Shore is when touched with energy, perseverence and money.—[Baltimore Sun.

The First Hop of the Year.

The Society event of the winter took place last Thursday evening at Music Hall, the occasion being a complimentary Hop given by the gentlemen to the ladies of Easton. At 9 o'clock this large and handsome room was filled with the beauty and fashion of five or six counties and as many different States. Weber's Band, of Baltimore furnished the music and time passed quickly and happily away under its inspiring influence. Among the strangers present we noticed Mrs. Clement Sullivane looking very young and pretty dressed in garnet velvet and point lace. Miss Wallace in ecru de-lyon was very lovely. Miss Sheppard in black silk skirt and Spanish lace waist was pronounced to be one of the most graceful dancers on the floor. These ladies were from Cambride and left on the Steamer Ida at 4 o'clock. Mrs. R. C. Hollyday chaperoned her three nieces, the Misses Tucker, daughters of the Hon. J. Randolph Tucker, and Miss Magruder from Cumberland; also her young daughter, Miss Meta Hollyday. Mrs. Hollyday wore long black silk skirt, trimmed in satin and lace with a crimson sat in surah waist, cut square neck, and handsome ornaments. Miss Tucker, white satin and brocade trimmed with pearls, with crimson plush waist and pearl ornaments. Miss Laura Tucker wore pale blue surah, panier overdress, of striped satin moire and waist to match of rich crimson color; this was the most effective dress in the room. Miss Magruder wore pale blue nun's velling, with white lace trimming. Miss Meta Hollyday dressed in pure white, looked very sweet and pretty. Mrs. William H. Smith was accompanied by her daughter, Mrs. Tharp, of Metuchen, New Jersey, and Misses Tabb and Johnson, of Baltimore. Mrs. Smith wore brown striped satin de-lyon. Mrs. Tharp wore garnet silk with with white lace trimmings. Miss Johnson in pink cashmere trimmed with satin and handsome lace and diamond ornaments. Miss Tabb, in white camels hair skirt with pink satin waist looked particularly pretty. Miss Lizzie Dawson, a young debutante, looked very sweet in white nun's velling and pearl ornaments. Miss Lizzie Jenkins in white, trimmed in crimson flowers. Miss Carrington in blue and white silk. Miss Maggie Tilghman in black silk and scarlet trimmings. Miss Robinson in cream colored nun's velling with blue trimming. Mrs. I. C. W. Powell in black silk with lace trimming. Mrs. Emily Goldsborough wore black silk and handsome white lace fichu. Mrs. Mary Cox wore black silk. Among the visiting gentlemen present were Col. Clement Sullivan, Messrs. Ross, Bryan and Steele, of Cambridge; and Mr. R. C. Forman and Mr. Ernest Hemsley, of Queen Anne's. At 12 o'clock supper was announced, and as this was under the supervision of Mrs. William H. Smith, it was a thorough treat and heartily enjoyed by all. The Virginia reel was finished at 4 o'clock. Then all "sighed; and looked and sighed again." The ball was over. The STAR reporter heard it voted on all sides that never before was a "Hop" such a success and as thoroughly enjoyed by all.

A SOLILOQUY.

To buy or not to buy, that's the question:
Whether 'tis more economical to buy my new suit now,
Or put it off, and suffer all the ills and shakes of winter,
Or to purchase, and thus put an end to a thousand and one heartaches.
To freeze and shake, aye, there's the rub,
For in those heartless blasts of old Boreas,
Such biting air will come as will freeze the marrow in my bones;
And thus the native hue of resolution grows bright within me,
And I'll go direct to Thompson & Kersey's Clothing Emporium
And buy my new suit and overcoat for Christmas,
And thus put an end to the doubts that harass me.
