Agricultural.

Lime and Limestone.

Early in the spring a great number of inquiries have been addressed to us in regard to ground raw limestone as a fertilizer. It is claimed by some that it is as effective as lime, and reliable statements have been made as to the results in the shape of large crops grown by its use. Now while I have no reason to doubt the truth of these statements, and do not question the veracity of those who have made them, I think I should explain to your readers that a ton of raw limestone cannot possibly be as effective as lime, or even as air slaked lime, unless the latter has been exposed for a sufficient time to have completely lost its causticity and become thoroughly carbonated again.

Limestone is carbonate of lime, and is insoluble in water, unless the latter contains some carbonic acid, when it is only slightly soluble. But as all water in the soil takes up some carbonic acid from decaying vegetable matter into solution, limestone is nearly always dissolved to a small extent in the water, sufficient at least to enable the water hand or rotate, to dissolve shell. When limestone is burned, the carbonic acid contained in it is driven off, the stone losing nine twentieths or 45 per cent. of its weight. The lime is an acrid, burning, caustic substance which has some peculiar properties upon which its agricultural value depends.

These are, first, that it has a great affinity for carbonic acid, a great eagerness to recover what it has lost, and to return to its first and stable condition again. Second, that it has also a great avidity of water, of which it will absorb about one-third of its weight, and yet remain perfectly dry. Third, that in thus absorbing water it falls to powder, and in fine powder by absorption and in organic substances is greatly assisted. It is then called 'air-slaked,' if this water is absorbed from the atmosphere. Fourth, that in this condition it is soluble in 700 times its volume of water, and when thus dissolved its chemical action is still further assisted. Fifth, that caustic lime exerts a very active decomposing effect upon organic matter, depriving it of carbonic acid and nitrogen, absorbing the one and driving off the other, or entering into some complicated combination with it, and [illegible] it to final decomposition [illegible] elements. Sixth, that it also has the property of dissolving silica, and thus freeing potash from its combination as silicate of potash in the soil, and leaving it free to be dissolved in water and taken up as food by the roots of plants. Lastly, it exerts a favorable effect upon both clay and sandy soils, loosening the one and compacting the other in texture, both mechanical [illegible] action.

Now these most important effects of lime give it a very great value, and render it one of the most indispensable aids to the farmer. But on the other hand limestone being chemically inert and only slightly soluble, can have but a very feeble effect, if any, and as must be obvious, none at all where the soil is already charged with lime; while lime by its varied chemical action has as great an effect upon limestone soils as upon peaty, mucky or alluvial soils. Some confusion of ideas exists as to the term 'air slaked.' This really means that the lime has been exposed to the moist air, until it has absorbed sufficient water to fall to a fine powder, and become hydrate of lime. But this hydrated lime is still caustic, and retains all its chemical activity, unless the exposure has been so long that the lime has also resumed its carbonic acid. But this requires a very long time—years in fact—and the lime sold under the name of 'agricultural lime,' and really the small broken waste lime of the lime kilns, yet retains the most of its caustic quality after it has lain about the kilns for several months. So that there is fresh air slaked lime, which is pure hydrate of lime and old air slaked lime, which has become carbonated or mild to a less or greater extent.

Forwarding Vegetables.

Not a few garden crops are ruined by the early spring frosts. To prevent this the American Agriculturist makes the following suggestions:

That the sun warms the earth during the day is a well understood fact; that this heat, or a portion of it, is lost during the night, is equally well known. Now, if a portion of the earth in which plants are growing be warmed during the day, and we prevent it from losing this heat during the night, it is evident that such plants will have a great advantage over those without such protection. All our melons, cucumbers, squashes, and other plants of that family come from tropical or warm countries, and in order to yield the best returns in our northern gardens, need every advantage we can give them. Every one may not find it convenient to start his cucumber, melon, and similar seeds, on pieces of sod, or in pots, in a hot-bed or frame, but he may greatly hasten forward the same in the open ground. All the expense or trouble required is a few pieces of sash frames, which can be done by knocking out the bottoms of soap or other boxes, and by tacking a piece of muslin or cotton cloth across the top. Sow the seed in the usual way, and every afternoon when the day begins to be cold, or shortly after three o'clock, usually turn these frames over the hills. This will hasten the germination of the seeds, and when the plants come up continue to protect them in this manner. If cold, windy day occurs, it will be better to leave these covers on than to expose the plants to the weather. The use of the covers or frames may be continued until the plants get too large for them. Not only will plants thus treated be much ahead of those without such protection, but they will also be largely preserved from the attacks of the "striped bug."

Corn Stalks and Fuel.

An Iowa farmer who has both coal and wood on his farm, warms his house with cornstalks, and claims that they make the best and cheapest fuel he can get. He uses a large stove, and bates the stalks in tightly-bound bundles, weighing about forty pounds each. A bundle burns three hours (without flame) in an air-tight stove. The large stove offers so much radiating surface that it does not need to be very hot. Two bundles a day are for the whole, with which to keep the stove going and the room warm. The farmer, Mr. Higgins, says: "I put up six hundred bundles of cornstalks in two days alone. I couldn't chop the wood to warm this room in a week. Then in the spring I have a load of strong ashes for my wheat field, while my neighbors have to out up the same corn stalks in the spring to get them over from the harrow. It makes me smile when I hear about these idiots up here in Minnesota who have any more cornstalks than they can cold or buy coal. Why, I'd thinke corn cornstalks than cut magic wood within sight of the house."

A Fertilizer specially adapted to the Soil of the Eastern Shore of Maryland.

$20 PER TON.

Sold at a very small profit on cost of production and clear of Agents' commissions.

THE COMPOSITION NO SECRET.

Made Without Sand or Dirt.

FOR SALE BY

THE OXFORD GUANO CO., Oxford, Md.

W. H. SETH, Secretary.

The attention of Farmers who desire to secure a good fertilizer at a reasonable price, is respectfully called to the above named brand.

The object of the manufacturers has been to originate a compound of plant foods directly adapted to the soil of the Eastern Shore of Maryland, and to fix the price therefor at the lowest possible figures; calling off all agents fees of $5 and $6 per ton and adding to the actual cost only a very small profit. We think this fertilizer has as much intrinsic value as most of the high price manures, and feel confident that farmers who may think proper to use it will say, that in its effects upon the soil, it will equal them.

The analysis, as made by Prof. G. A. Liebig, shows it to contain:—

Ammonia, from	.75 to 1.25 per cent.
Phosphoric Lime, from	5.00 to 7.00 "
Lime	33.10 "
Carbonic Acid	28.07 "

The lime and carbon, which are essential to plant growth, are obtained from oyster shells ground to powder, instead of being burnt. This combination not only dispenses with the necessity for dirt or sand to hold the chemicals, but is a most valuable assistant to their action.

We are also manufacturing ground lime, which we propose to put upon the market at a low price. aug30-6m

A little more care in stacking and ricking, will insure so much better keeping as to enable farmers to spare at least half of their straw, the most for which would nearly pay for their phosphates.
