KNIGHTS OF PYTHIAS NEWS

Next Tuesday night, September 30, t 7:30 Charity Lodge No. 58 K. of P. will hold their regular meeting. This will also be the beginning of their regular weekly meetings after the summer vacation. It is hoped that a large number of members will turn out, as there are several matters of importance to be brought before the lodge.

Tuesday night will also be dues night, it being the last meeting in the quarter. Don't forget this important duty so that you do not become non-beneficial.

Knights, this is the beginning of our busy season and it is hoped that each member will obligate himself to get one of his friends to sign an application. This will be one way to be of service to your friend. Be a practical Pythian and get busy.

WHY COOLIDGE CLASSED MELLON WITH HAMILTON

Washington, Sept. 25.—(Special correspondence—Under the able management of Secretary of the Treasury Mellon, and because of the drastic economy of the entire Republican Administration, the national debt is being reduced at the approximate rate of a billion dollars a year. The saving in interest on that reduction of principal is about $42,000,000 a year, but the figures show that the taxpayers are actually being saved an interest charge of almost three times

HIS BLIGHTED ROMANCE

By RICHARD CONNELL

P. ELMORE COWLEY stopped his car. He stopped it expertly, with one manicured hand on the brake. He stopped it with a devil-may-care nonchalance. His features wore an aloof, superior smile; his manner, as he surveyed his car, was slightly bored, and had a touch of hauteur about it; It was P. Elmore Cowley's imitation of an English duke as played by a motion picture actor reared in a barber shop. In his mind's eye his car was a costly limousine of foreign extraction, a roaring, throbbing bull of a car, with racy, rakish lines. Actually it was an elevator in a big Sixth avenue department store.

Daily now, for three years, P. Elmore Cowley had piloted the elevator up and down, down and up. He was a youngish, plumpish, blondish man; if he had but half an inch more chin he could have posed for collar advertisements. In the tone of a lord of the manor addressing his tenants, he said, crisply:

"Going up! Step to the rear of the car. Don't crowd, madam. There are other cars. Going up!"

Again he brought his car to a stop. In swift, mechanical accents he announced:

"Second flood! Men's and boys' clothing, groceries, fishing tackle, mops, lampshades, punching-bags, toys, laces and bathing suits. Anybody want second? Going up! Step to the rear of the car, please."

Up he went. He stood very erect and stern at the throttle. In his mind's eye he was a colonel in the red and gold uniform of his majesty's Royal Lancers; actually his uniform was gray and bore on its sleeve the monogram S. & K., which stood for Stein & Katz, who owned the store. He stopped the car so abruptly that a lady passenger almost swallowed her artificial teeth.

"Third floor!" he chanted. "Ladies' shoes and blouses, children's hats and wraps, art goods, hardware, negligees, hair goods, clocks, hats, books, stoves, furs and pianos. Going up! Step to the rear of the car, please!"

The elevator slid skyward. Mentally P. Elmore was cruising up Fifth avenue in his roadster, an heiress by his side; he was wearing white spats and smelled of Parisian perfume; this was his constant day dream. The figure "4" painted on the floor jerked him back to real life, caused him, by habit, to stop his car and automatically call out:

"Fourth floor! Ladies' and misses' cloaks, suits and evening gowns, phono

POULTRY

POULTRY LICE AND MITES ARE HARMFUL

Poultry lice and mites are found wherever poultry is raised and they retard growth and development as well as egg production.

There are several species of lice and they are referred to in respect to the place they are found on the fowls as head lice, tail lice, body lice and so on. They are very active, and, while they do not suck blood, they live on the plumage and scales of the skin and do not spend much of their life off the chicken's body. Their mouth parts are biting and their food consists of the feathers and scales of the skin on which they live. They are pale in color and the eggs or nits are usually found around the vent feathers of the bird.

It takes a week for the eggs to hatch and the adult stage is reached in 17 to 20 days after the laying of the eggs. If they are not checked the birds will be swarming with lice in a short while. Lice are spread rapidly from one bird to another, but they do not live long when off the body, due to lack of warmth.

In treatment of these parasites it is not enough to treat once and then expect the birds to be rid of them. Lice multiply very rapidly and must be kept constantly in check. It is possible to practically rid the poultry of lice by proper care and treatment.

There are several methods of treating for lice and one of the most effective measures is the use of sodium fluoride, says a writer in the Successful Farmer. This is a white powder and can be purchased at the drug store. Only a very small amount is needed for each bird. From the fact that lice live only on the body of the birds it is essential that each bird must be treated individually. The powder is applied with the fingers and a pinch placed in the region of the head, neck, back, tail, vent and under each thigh and wing. Rub it into these spots or place it so that it gets to the base of the feathers where the lice and eggs are. They should be treated as often as necessary and a little pinch of the powder in each of the above places will make short work of the lice.

A homemade powder for dusting may be made by mixing three parts gasoline to one part stock dip and the addition of enough cement to take up the liquid and make a powder. The bird is held with its head down and the powder worked into the feathers.

Mercurial ointment is rather widely used for setting hens and is a mixture

WASHINGTON LETTER

(From our regular correspondent.)

Washington, D. C., Sept. 25.—Clem Shaver, John Davis' campaign manager has thrown a bomb into the Democratic camp. "If the election were held tomorrow no one of the three presidential candidates would receive a majority of the votes in the electoral college," said Shaver this week in a burst of frankness, talking to a group of newspapermen. Chairman Shaver's assertion is a flat contradiction of the numerous statements put out in his name by the Democratic publicity men, in which they claimed everything in sight for Davis and insisted he was as good as elected. Naturally there is havoc in the Democratic machine. No doubt, Chairman Shaver told the truth as he sees it when he spoke for himself, and not through his publicity bureau. Only a week ago attention was called in this correspondence to the folly of national chairman "claiming everything in sight," and while it is hardly to be supposed that influenced Mr. Shaver to tell the truth for once, it is at least refreshing to get the honest opinion of a naional chairman, even if it disrupts his party machine. Of course the truth is that no one believes the extravagant claims, least of all those who, through paid publicity agents make them. And the further truth is that no one knows how the election would go were it held tomorrow. That Davis is making no converts is obvious. But how many is La Follette making? That no man knows. However, with when they are beaten, as they are prone to in many other republics in this hemisphere, and as they have in the older republics of the past, because they know their rights will be protected and that if their views are correct they will ultimately prevail. La Follette would lay the axe to the foundation of the Constitution by giving to Congress power to overrule the Supreme Court. His proposition is so revolutionary that, while it appeals to some who are too impatient to make a long fight for their opinions, it repels thinking Americans with love of their country and respect for the Constiution in their hearts. That, as Dr. Butler points out, is why La Follette obviously thinks it necessary to devote so much time and no small amount of falsification and misrepresentation to defending this plank in his platform. It is only natural, of course, for the Socialists and the I. W. Ws. to support La Follette, because their first wish is to overthrow the Government.

BOY KILLED ACCIDENTLY

Frederick, Sept. 25.—A coroner's jury decided today that Robert Wilhide, aged 14, son of William Wilhide, of Thurmont, found in the mountains yesterday with a gunshot wound in his left breast, was killed by an accidental discharge of the weapon. It is supposed that he had his left hand over the barrel of the gun when it was discharged, as this member was partly blown off.

The disappearance of the lad occasioned a great deal of concern until his body was found.
