MAYOR AND COMMON COUNCIL ADOPT RESOLUTION ON REMOVAL OF SNOW

At the meeting of the Mayor and Common Council on Monday evening, February 2, 1925, a petition was submitted from various citizens, representing to the Council that snow, such as we have now, renders the parking of automobiles near the curb impossible and allowing the snow to remain on the streets is not progressive and requesting the council to provide for the removal of snow in the future so as to permit people to park their automobiles near the curb in this city. No one appeared in support of the petition but the exceptional condition of our streets being apparent, induced its careful consideration, and it was afterwards on motion duly second.

Resolved, that as no provision was made in the budget for the removal of snow, that it was inadvisable to attempt something for which the financial means were not available , and that the unfortunate condition you complain of might, in the future, be somewhat guarded against by cleaning off only half of the pavement, and in order to carry out this suggestion it was further resolved,

That the Ordinances of the town, requiring the removal of snow from the whole of the pavement by the property owner, be for this season suspended as to half of said pavement.

H. E. KOONTZ, Mayor.
R. N. SNADER, Clerk.

POULTRY

COMFORTABLE HOUSE ENCOURAGES FOWLS

The poultry house is both the home of the hen and the factory where winter eggs are produced, and unless it provides suitable living and working conditions the hen cannot be expected to lay well. To be comfortable the house must be dry, well ventilated, well lighted and have sufficient floor space to provide exercise by scratching. Dryness is insured by having a good roof, keeping the floor of the house higher than the surrounding ground, and by providing good ventilation. Ventilation must supply plenty of fresh air without drafts. This is secured by having the south side relatively open and the other three sides absolutely tight. The importance of light in the poultry house has not been properly emphasized in the past. Recent experiments with artificial lights show that by furnishing more light so that the working period for the birds is lengthened the egg production can be materially increased. In many farm poultry houses no windows are provided and the house is in constant twilight on cloudy days even when the door is left open. Needless to say, this condition does not favor activity on the part of the hen. To insure good natural light in a poultry house the openings in the walls should equal about one-fourth of the floor space of the house. At least half of these openings should be for open-front ventilation, and the windows should be so arranged that the maximum amount of sunlight will be available to the birds. Wherever possible windows should be placed in the east and west ends of the building so that the early morning and late afternoon light will be secured. To insure room for scratching not only must sufficient floor space be provided but the droppings must be kept off the floor and a deep litter of straw or similar material be supplied so that the birds can be made to scratch for their feed. To keep the droppings off the floor every poultry house should be provided with a droppings platform arranged underneath the roosts to catch the manure.

Dried Buttermilk Found Profitable for Poultry

At the Indiana experiment station several tests have also been made with dried buttermilk for laying hens. In one of its bulletins on this subject, A. C. Phillips, who conducted the tests in which dried buttermilk was compared with liquid buttermilk, says: "The income from the liquid buttermilk-fed pen was $7.13; from the dried buttermilk-fed pen, $8.21; and from the no-milk-fed pen, $2.39." Stating the same facts in different words, Mr. Phillips continues: "The profit over feed cost from the liquid buttermilk-fed pen was $4.92; from the dried buttermilk-fed pen, $5.69; and from the no-milk-fed pen, 78 cents."

Thus we see that the pen fed dried buttermilk as a protein carrier, made the largest profit per bird per year. The pen that received no milk of any kind netted less than $1 per hen per year. In addition to getting more eggs from the dried buttermilk than from the liquid buttermilk, that institution also obtained greater hatchability in the eggs from the dried buttermilk pen than from the one fed liquid buttermilk.

Emden Geese Popular

The Emden breed of geese is one of the best known and most popular of all the varieties known. Individuals of this breed are large, and beautifully formed. The back is fairly straight while the under part of the body is canoe shaped, or, almost crescent. They have blue eyes, orange bill shanks and toes and pure white plumage. Size and vigor are the principal features to be considered when mating these birds. It is quite common for the females to develop a "dewlap" or loose pouch of skin under the body.

Poultry Facts

Keep strong, healthy, vigorous stock and care for it properly.

* * *

Know the preferences of your market and strive to meet them.

* * *

Never wash eggs unless they are to be used immediately by local trade.

* * *

Don't wash dirty eggs. Washed eggs spoil quickly and are of lower market value.

* * *

The first essential in marketing quality eggs as required by the new egg law is quality production. When proper methods are employed it is easy to produce and market quality eggs.

* * *

Keep the hens off the dropping boards by putting three-fourths-inch wire netting immediately under the roosts.

* * *

Watch for cracks and do not have strong drafts in the roosting rooms. If you neglect this, you will have to fight colds and roup later on.

* * *

Confine the hens to the poultry house when the yards are muddy until the middle of the afternoon ,when most of the eggs have been laid. This will mean fewer dirty eggs.
