Miscellaneous.

Herein Lies the Secret.

What is the chief advantage gained in feeding cooked corn to hogs? asks 'Stockman' in the Rural New Yorker, and replies that it has not been made very clear. Some claim for cooking hogs' food, but experience shows these persons are in error. There is no danger of the food being bolted without proper mastication when it is cooked or mashed. Now this is a popular fallacy. It is broadly stated in a Western stock journal that, so far as regards bran fed to a cow, this is true. But even this authority is wrong. To test it I gave a cow two quarts of dry bran and watched her eat it—with my watch in my hand. She occupied seventeen minutes in the chewing process, and a good deal of saliva was secreted during the process. The next day at the same hour I gave her a mash of two quarts of bran which had been scalded and stayed five hours. It was all all swallowed and the trough licked in three minutes. I have not tried pigs in this respect, but I know that a quantity of boiled meal or corn will be eaten in half the time that dry meal or corn will. The dry meal cannot be swallowed until it is well moistened with saliva and reduced to soft paste. And herein is the secret of it all. It is the food that is digested that makes the flesh and fat. Now water is not any aid to digestion, nor is the softening of the food before it is eaten. On the contrary, it is a hindrance to it because the soft, pulpy food sooner passes out of the stomach. Saliva is a digestive agent, and not only softens the food but makes the starch soluble, and there is no question that in the chewing of the dry food a very large quantity of saliva is secreted and mixed very evenly with food. Let any one give a mess of boiled oats to a horse that has been used to have the grain dry, and the soft oats will be found quite plentifully in the manure during next day.

Value of Soods.

Sods are the cream of the soil, containing the very elements of plant food that make soil so productive. When properly rotted, this material makes one of the best invigoratives to be found for trees, vines, vegetables and cereals, and is one of the most readily and cheaply obtained fertilizers in use. Sods may be gathered from the fence corners of tilled fields, cut well from the surface after plowing and harrowing sward land, and in many places from the roadside when the highway is undergoing repairs. To utilize sods and secure from them their best fertilizing effects, they should be gathered and piled up in some out-of-the-way place, dowuward, and the whole covered with ashes or chip dust, or both, to keep the grass from growing. A year or two will be required for them to thoroughly decay, unless cut down and shoveled over after laying long enough for the grass to be killed entirely out. Water should be applied at intervals sufficient to keep the pile moist and prevent a dry, mouldy rot. The best way to provide for the wetting down is to leave the top unpiling and apply the water abundantly there in a dry time. To get such a lot of good material in the best shape for applying to crops, we would advise mixing it with well-rotten barnyard manure. Say about two loads of it to one of manure, then spread it broadcast on grass and crops of small grain. For corn or vegetables apply it in the hills or drills.

Healthy Trees.

To get healthy fruit we must have healthy trees, is as true to day as it ever was. Yet, for all, we often find persons condemning a fruit as worthless when the fault lies with the sickly tree that bore it. An unhealthy raspberry, blackberry or strawberry, always gives fruit of poorer flavor than plants in good health. It is not always easy to tell when plants of small fruits are in good health, for they often have something the matter with them before the injury is very plain. The experienced eye detects a change in the color of the foliage, in many cases of plant trouble. If we know the soil to be good, and the plant has for all this a yellowish tint, there is something the matter with the plant. It is generally useless to try to restore such a sickly stock. Better dig up the plants of another kind, and plant where the kind has not been growing before, if we can find such a spot.

White specks in butter are caused by a too rapid souring of the milk or by keeping the cream much longer than a place. The cream should be churned every day as fresh cream is added to it. When fresh cream containing more or less milk is mixed with that which has been skimmed previously, and it has become sour, that sour milk is at once curdled and the small flakes of curd become inclosed in masses of cream, which is quite impossible to separate from the butter after churning. Careful management of the cream is the best preventative.

The largest apple orchard in the world is that of Mr. K. McKinstry, of Hudson, N. Y. It comprises 300 acres, on which grow 30,000 trees. The varieties are: 7,000 Rhode Island Greenings, 6,000 Baldwins, 4,000 King of Tompkins County, 800 Astrachans, 500 Northern Spys, 500 Russets, 400 Gravenstein, 200 Cranberry Pippin, 200 Davis, 200 Ohienburg, 200 Richard's Graft, with less numbers of Johnathan, Hubbardston, Vaudevere, Belleflower, Twenty Ounce and some others. The only green apples are the Rhode Island Greenings.
