AGRICULTURAL.

Currying Milch Cows.

To a farmer the idea of currying a cow, milch or otherwise, is an absurdity; but to the dairymen who have highly bred cows, who take a pride in their business and get the top price of the market for their produce it is a matter of moment, in that it is known to increase the milk flow and the butter produce by ten to twenty per cent. We say that this is known, and will further say that it is so far an established fact that few, if any, can be found to dispute it.

There are many points in the conduct of a dairy unknown, indeed, unthought of by farmers, that will presently have a prominent place in their management, very much to the benefit of themselves and those who receive and make use of their produce.

Among these are succulent food, protection from inclement weather, kind handling, thorough and careful milking, full and regular feeding, clean stabling, (when stabled) and an absence of foul odors, good ventilation, plenty of light and that through cleaning of the skin without no milch cow can preform her duty thoroughly and well. With all these we must, to have a "tip top" article of butter, have the washing of the udder and teats before milking and with this an entire absence of the filth accumulated feeding and lounging between milking.

Of all these, one of the most important is that of periodical currying, in that it cleanses the hide of superfluous hair, keeps it active and heathful, and void of that peculiar odor so commonly found in milk and sometimes in butter. It promotes the secretion and disposition of the old particles of the animal system which would otherwise be absorbed by the secretory glands and be carried off in the milk, and leaves the latter not only purer, but of a much better flavor and gives promise to the butter maker of a higher color and a purer flavor to the butter from the churn, hence higher price in the market.

Herein may seem lots of trouble over details, but when reduced to a system they occupy little of time, labor or expense. —Colman's Rural World.

Angle Worms and Lime.

It has always been a mystery among scientific agriculturists that a free dressing of lime should so greatly improve the productiveness of land, as it often does. Lime is present in almost all soils almost all soils in far greter quantity than is needed merely as plant food. Not all soils are benefitted by liming, and it has been observed that land rich in inert vegetable matter is that which is most benefitted by the liberal application of lime, up even to 200 bushels to the acre. Now to put two and two together. This land, rich in undecomposed vegetable matter, is almost always full of insects and worms, especially angle worms. Every woman who raises pot plants knows that weak lime water is death to worms. J. J. H. Gregory has been experimenting, and says that there are often in such land five or six tons of angle worms to the acre. Kill them with rain water saturated with lime and what a tremendous dressing of animal matter their dead bodies will make! Is not here an explanation of the mysterious value of lime as a fertilizing agent.

Caring for a Horse Harness.

The average harness in the rural districts is poorly cared for, and short lived. Not infrequently it is hung in the horse stable exposed to the ammonia generated from a pile of fermenting manures. The stable may be furnished at odd spells with bedding or absorbents of some kind, but these are not promptly renewed, and there is a great waste of the most valuable constituents of manure. The harness has the benefit of the ammonia, and the effect is about the same as washing it with lye. The harness rots, cracks, and without frequent oiling comes to grief at an early date. The safer way is to have a place for the harness in the carriage house, or some building outside the stable. If the stable alone is available, it should be kept free from the smell of ammonia by the constant use of absorbents, sawdust, sods, road dust, straw, or refuse hay. A harness properly cared for and kept clean and pliable will last twice as long as one that is neglected. It is much cheaper to spend ten cents for neat's foot oil, once in three months, than fifty cents at the harness maker's.

Many may now be considering the subject of fruit evaporation, and wonder if it will pay. Two or three things are to be considered. If you have plenty of fruit, if you will work industriously, and if you will have only a first-class product for the market, it will pay. A thousand bushels of good apples will yield 4,000 pounds of evaporated fruit, which, according to the present market quotations, would bring about twelve cents per pound. It is more profitable than to sell the green fruit for an average of say twenty-five cents per bushel. Berries, sweet corn and green fruit of every kind can be evaporated, and when we think how much goes to waste every year when fruit is plentiful we shall see that there is money in it. Evaporated fruit always brings a better price in market than that dried in the old style, and it costs but little to run the evaporators. Evaporators cost from $50 to $600. The former will care about ten bushels, and the latter from 100 to 150 bushels per day of twenty-four hours. What could be saved in fruit that now is wasted would in a short time buy an evaporator.

Preventive of Malarial Diseases.

OPINION OF EMINENT DR. H R. WALTON, OF ANNAPOLIS, MD.

"COLDEN'S LIQUID BEEF TONIC is a most excelent preparation. It is par excellence, superior to cod-liver oil or anything I have ever used in wasted or impaired constitutions, and extremely beneficial as preventive of malarial diseases." A Life Doubly Assured.

A resident of Bangor, Maine, writing to C. N. Crittenton, New York, for a supply of HALE'S HONEY OF HOREHOUND AND TAR, mentions, incidentally that three months ago a New England life-insurance company refused to grant him a policy on the ground that he was consumptive. "But," he adds, "thanks to the healing properties of that invaluable preparation, my lungs are perfectly sound, and I yesterday passed a medical examination without an objection, and insured my life for $5,000."
