Duck-Raising.

Thousands of English housekeepers have known more during the past fifty years about the profit there is in raising ducks for market, than one in twenty of our American farmers yet realizes. Ducks mature very rapidly, and are ready for market when quite young, and delicacy for the table of an epicure, and worth a good round price, too. The great market duck in England is the Aylesbury, a very pretty white variety, that grows with great rapidity from the shell. A good fat duck is the ne plus ultra of good living for our tooth, especially when it has been raised and fattened on the right food, and properly dressed. The Northwestern Farmer and Dairyman says it is both economical and sensible to raise ducks. A great deal of the coarse vegetable food used in a family, with some small potatoes and a little grain, is all that will be required to keep a small flock in them the year through. Ducklings mature early in their lives; one would not feel the time passing before they are ready for market. For this reason they are profitable. At five or six months old they will, with ordinary care, dress ten or twelve pounds per pair, and give besides a nice lot of feathers, which can be sold at a fair price, or be used to increase the family stock of beds and pillows.

Ducks are easily kept from the shell after they have passed the critical period like chicks and poults, are industrious foragers, and thrive rapidly. Their keen appetites, capacious craws, and strong digestive organs enable them to assimilate any kind of coarse or refuse food. They are at home in the stubble field, gleaning what the reapers left behind, will turn into a pasture and be contented on grass, and they are happy in a pond, or brook or marsh, diving in the mud, searching for animal, fish or insect food, larvæ, and vegetation. They do not require an expensive domicile for their use. Being generous feeders they grow rapidly, and are ready for the market early, and their early disposition to mature early is one of the best recommendations in favor of the general cultivation of ducks for the market or table.

How Butter May be Spoiled.

Good butter may be spoiled in churning. Over-churning ruins the texture and changes the proper waxiness to a disagreeable, sickly greasiness. This is [illegible] in [illegible] with dashes, which press the butter against the sides of the churn and squeeze and [illegible] it. Too long churning spoils the quality by oxidation of the butter, and the premature formation of strong flavored acids in it, the full presence of which we call rancidity. It may be spoiled at too high a temperature, by which it is made soft and oily and of greasy texture and flavor. No subsequent treatment can remedy this error. It may be spoiled before the cream reaches the churn by keeping it long, or, what is practically the same, by keeping it in too warm a place; 50 degrees is about the right temperature if the cream is kept a week; if it is kept at 52 degrees three days is long enough. White specks are produced in butter by overchurning or by having the cream too sour. Either of these faults produces curd in the milk, and the small flakes of this cannot be washed out of the butter. So will the use of salt containing specks of lime which unite with the butter and form insoluble lime soap. White specks are covered up to a large extent by using good coloring, which is made of oil as the solvent. But this use of coloring being used to disguise a fault and to add an undeserved virtue is worthy of denunciation.—American Dairyman.

Good Horses Produced by Proper Food.

To what extent the horse may be endowed with any power of reasoning may be a question, but the intelligence that he sometimes exhibits is, certainly, something more than instinct. Some months ago, a horse having been pelted with [illegible] stones by cruel boys until his flesh was bruised and his leg fractured, limped into pasture. Two of the colts in this pasture, an intelligent young horse, which seemed jealous of the attentions of the dog. He bent his head and inspected the broken leg, with his fore feet, [illegible] some strange [illegible] and then [illegible] while the horse was eating the bran mash which [illegible] gently caught the dog by the neck, and with his teeth lifted him into the trough. The two friends fed together and the invalid [illegible] long. [illegible] bed [illegible] encircled him with one of his feet showing the at most considerate care. Such humanity might well be emulated by the human race.

Hot Bath for Insects.

A German method for destroying thrips and red spiders is to have a large vessel filled with clean hot water at a temperature of 133°. The infested plants are dipped into the water for the space of four seconds when the insects will be killed, and no damage result to the plants; it is best not to continue the immersion longer than the time noted. If afterwards a few insects appear that have developed since the operation, it may be repeated. The temperature of the water should be watched and not allowed to fall below 122°. It is said that even young shoots and buds will not suffer in the least from this treatment.—Vick.

The cluster of eggs that may be found on apple tree limbs should be picked off during open weather in the winter, and thus prevent the hatching of the [illegible] caterpillar. The eggs appear to be varnished, but such is not really the case, since a slight coat of varnish, or oil, would destroy their vitality by excluding the air.

Frozen roots, or, frozen food of any kind, is very pernicious to swine and all other stock, yet it is apt to scour them badly, and in any event badly disturbs their digestion and renders the other food taken into the stomach less nutritive to the animal.

It is a good idea to select potatoes that are to be planted next Spring as they are dug in the fall and then give them good care in the winter. Choose tubers from vigorous growing plants and those that are fully matured.

The Culture of Beauty.

Although nature alone can produce perfect beauty, art may in a great measure supply nature's deficiencies. We see this instanced in the clearness and lustre imparted to even a [illegible] skin by GLENN'S SULPHUR SOAP. A lady of forty, who uses the [illegible] for at least ten years of her age, [illegible] the injurious cosmetics which obstruct the pores, it is entirely [illegible]. See that the No-Stitches, Stitches or [illegible] Oil cloth section, [illegible] Sold by [illegible] Druggists, Boston.

The Canton Monitor Engine.

C. Aultman & Co.'s Monitor Engines are UPRIGHT BOILERS, which experience has demonstrated to be infinitely safer than horizontal boilers. We can offer very great inducements to those wanting an engine, besides selling them a machine not liable to explode. Safety and economy both vindicate the superiority of the upright boiler.
