Sheep Manure.

J. B. Killebrew, writing to Southern Industry, states that sheep manure, from its coldness, does not ferment like horse dung, [illegible] its value much longer. [illegible] excrement of the horse [illegible] the very best of manures produced by animals, especially from those sheep that are fed with rich food for fattening purposes. The mastication of sheep is so perfect that there is no danger of weed seeds coming up after having passed through the stomach of a sheep. Both the urine and the dung are very rich in fertilizing properties. Urea, the active principle of urine, has a very large quantity of nitrogen in it, and sheep's urine contains, according to one of our best analysts, 23 parts of urea in every 1,000 parts, and 12 parts of salt, among which is a large proportion of phosphoric acid. In 1,000 parts of the dung of sheep there are 68 per cent. of water, 19.3 of animal and vegetable matter, and 15.7 per cent. of saline matters. This 19.3 per cent. of organic matter contains as much nitrogen, which is the value of manures chiefly, as 43 parts of horse dung, 63 parts of hog manure, or 128 parts of cow dung, and is equal to 160 parts of the ordinary stable or barnyard manure. It is much dryer than other manures, having but little water, comparatively speaking. For instance, let a horse receive 100 parts of dry fodder, and he will dejecate 216 pounds of fresh manure, which, being dried, makes 46 pounds of dry manure, while the sheep, with the same food, would give but 128 pounds of fresh manure, making 43 pounds of dry dung. This is manure made with the ordinary method of feeding, such as hay, fodder, and such grass as they can pick up. But when sheep are fed with grain or other highly stimulating food for fattening purposes, food rich in albumen and phosphates, the oil and starch only are assimilated, [illegible] while the manure, including the larger part of the salts, goes to the manure heap, thus adding very greatly to its value as a land application. This fact has long been known and used to the improvement of land by the English farmer, and must be learned and practiced by our people. The declining fertility of our soil calls loudly for all the aid we can give, and it is time to recognize the fact that if we continue to draw from the land and never put anything to it, it will after awhile cease to respond to our calls upon it.

Household Hints.

Salt fish are quickest and best freshened by soaking in sour milk.

Cold rain water and soap will remove machine grease from washable fabrics.

Fish may be scaled much easier by first dipping them into scalding water for a moment.

If stove polish is mixed with very strong soap suds the luster appears immediately, consequently there is less dust to breathe and blacken.

Carpets should be thoroughly beaten on the wrong side first, and then on the right; after which spots may be removed by the use of ox gall or ammonia and water.

When bread is taken from the oven wring a clean cloth out of water and wrap around. Then cover tightly with the usual bread cloth. This makes the crust nice and tender.

To wash [illegible] goods nicely, to each pail of water used add one tablespoonful of ammonia and one of beef gall; wash out quickly and rinse thoroughly in warm water with a very little beef-gall added.

If you dip your broom in clean, hot suds once a week, then make it till it is almost dry, and then hang it up or stand it with the handle down, it will last twice as long as it would without this operation.

A good way to clean lamp burners when they have become covered with soot and gum, is to boil them up in a strong solution of soda water. The wicks need an occasional washing, too, to remove sediment.

Rats on Ships.

Rats greatly infest ships, and are by them carried to every part of the world. So industriously do they make homes for themselves in the numerous crannies and corners in the hull of a ship, that it is impossible to get rid of them. Ships take out rats as well as passengers and cargo every voyage, whether the former remain in the ship or not is not known to themselves. When the East India company had ships of their own they employed a rat catcher, who sometimes captured 500 rats in one ship just returned from Calcutta. The ship rat is often the black species. Sometimes black and brown inhabit the same vessel, and unless they carry on perpetual hostilities the one party will keep in the head of the vessel and the other to the stern. The ship rat is very anxious that his supply of fresh water shall not fail; he will come on deck when it rains and climb up to the wet sails to suck them. Sometimes he mistakes a spirit cask for a water cask, and he gets drunk. A captain on an American ship is credited (or discredited) with an ingenious bit of sharp practice as a means of clearing his ship from rats. Having discharged a cargo at a port in Holland, he towed his ship in juxtaposition to another, which had just taken in a cargo of Dutch cheese. He laid a plank at night from the vessel to the other; the rats, tempted by the odor, trooped along the plank and began the feast. He took care that the plank should not be there to serve them as a pathway back again and so the cheese factory had a rat additional in his outward cargo.

Destroyed by the Bushel.

A number of insects aid the farmer and gardener in keeping the greatest of potato pests, the Colorado beetle, in check. The Lady bugs or "Lady-birds," in their larval state, are among the most effective enemies of the "potato bug," doing valuable service in destroying both eggs and larvæ. The mature lady-bug are red, pink or bright color, with small black dots, and should be known and protected by all farmers.

High Authority.

DR. W. E. SCOTT, President of the College of Physicians, Montreal, writes: "I have recommended GOLDEN LIQUID BEEF TONIC in the best preparation used for debility, indigestion, dyspepsia, fever, ague, and loss of appetite." (Take no other.) Of druggists generally.

From [illegible], M. D.,

[illegible]

I have used GOLDEN LIQUID BEEF TONIC in my practice, and have been [illegible] with the results. As a tonic in all cases of debility, weakness, anæmia, chlorosis, etc., etc., it cannot be surpassed. [illegible] (GOLDEN—take no other.) Of druggists.

Sheep Manure.

J. B. Killebrew, writing to Southern Industry, states that sheep manure, from its coldness, does not ferment like horse dung, [illegible] its value much longer [illegible] excrement of the horse [illegible] the very best of manures produced by animals, especially from those sheep that are fed with rich food for fattening purposes. The Canton Monitor Engine.

C. Aultman & Co.'s Monitor Engines are UPRIGHT BOILERS, which experience has demonstrated to be infinitely safer than horizontal boilers. We can offer very great inducements to those wanting an engine, besides selling them a machine not liable to explode. Safety and economy both vindicate the superiority of the upright boiler.
