FARM POULTRY

WINDOW GLASS IS HELP FOR POULTRY

A short time ago scientists found that animals do better when they can be in the open at least a few hours each day exposed to the direct rays of the sun. This has been demonstrated to be especially true of hogs and chickens. The reason is that ordinary window glass acts as a filter to the direct rays of the sun. Glass filters out the so-called ultra-violet rays—the rays that have a great deal to do with invigorating the animal.

Recently Prof. L. V. Crum, physicist of Iowa State college, has completed some tests that are of interest in this connection.

Professor Crum took 24 chickens that had been kept under ordinary glass for three weeks. The birds were divided into three groups of eight each. One group was housed under glass cloth. The second group was housed under celo-glass, another product that does not exclude ultra-violet light, and a third group was housed under ordinary window glass. All were given the same feed and general care. The experiment continued for four weeks. Two of the chickens kept under ordinary glass died of rickets. The remaining six gained 180 per cent in weight during the four-week period. All of the eight chickens kept under the glass cloth remained healthy and made a gain of 250 per cent during the four-week period. The group kept under the celo-glass did not do so well as that under the glass cloth. In this group two birds also died, but it appears that one of them died from an unavoidable cause, for which the celo-glass could not be blamed. The other, however, died of rickets, but is was not a healthy bird when the experiment began.

While this test is not reported because it is conclusive, we refer to it merely to remind our readers that ordinary window glass is not as good a product as we have been in the habit of thinking, because it screens out some of the most active rays of the sunlight, says the Wisconsin Farmer. No doubt the open front houses that have come into such general use in recent years owe their beneficial effect upon the flock at least partly to the fact that the ultra-violet rays of the sun pass freely through the curtain fronts.

Many Poultry Diseases Are Easily Preventable

Though most poultry diseases are curable, they all require more time and work than the average farm flock is worth. Therefore, it may easily be seen that prevention should be the first and most important rule in poultry sanitation and disease control. Roup, tuberculosis, chickenpox and fowl cholera are the most dangerous diseases affecting chickens.

Most farm poultry houses lack a simple and effective method of ventilation. In many houses the fowls are overcrowded, and when this is the case and there is no good method of ventilation, the air is sure to become damp and we all know that it is in just this sort of an atmosphere that roup thrives. To avoid this condition, see to it that the front of your poultry house has an open space that equals at least one-fourth of the floor space of the building. And allow at least three square feet of floor space for each fowl.

Poultry diseases spread through the droppings of diseased birds. Most flock owners have dropping boards under the roosts, and if they haven't they should have by all means. If a part of the flock is diseased, millions of germs may be removed through the droppings instead of leaving them in the litter to contaminate the other birds. Much of the surplus moisture is also removed through the droppings.

Keep the drinking water pure and clean, and sterilize the vessels every two or three days so long as disease is present in the flock. A teaspoonful of permanganate of potash may be dissolved in all the water it will make purple for drinking water whenever the birds seem in need of a tonic.

Poultry Notes

Separate the cockerels and the pullets.

* * *

Give plenty of feed to growing stock.

* * *

Each duck yields about two ounces of marketable feathers.

* * *

Houses must be sprayed frequently with a good disinfectant to keep down mites, lice, and disease germs.

* * *

Rations for the laying hens should be compounded so that the hens will eat at least one-half as much mash as grain.

* * *

Soft-shelled eggs may be caused by a lack of shell material, which may be the case if the hens do not have access to oyster shell.

* * *

It is profitable to keep hens comfortable. Keep the coop free from draft, still well ventilated and dry. The coldest coop is the tightly closed, ill-ventilated one.

WEDDINGS

PLANK—COLEMAN

Saturday evening, October 24, 1925, Mr. W. Kenneth Plank, Union Bridge, and Miss Hattie I. Coleman, Bark Hill, were married by Rev. J. H. Hoch at the Church of God, parsonage in Uniontown.

BENSON—SIDWELL

Amid a bower of gaily-tinted autumnal foliage, a wedding was solemnized Saturday afternoon, October 24, 1925, at 4 o'clock, in the Methodist Protestant church, this city, when Miss M. Frances Sidwell, daughter of Dr. and Mrs. F. H. Sidwell, this city, and James H. Benson, son of Mrs. Sally Benson and the late Rev. Joshua L. Benson, Baltimore, were married by the pastor the Rev. J. L. Nichols.

The pulpit was beautifully decorated with autumn leaves, flowers and ferns. A number of friends and relatives witnessed the ceremony. Miss Margaret Benson, Baltimore, a cousin of the bridegroom sang "At Dawning," accompanied on the pipe organ by Miss Anna Shriver, who also played softly a number of selections before the ceremony. To the strains of the wedding march from Lohengrin, the bridal party entered the auditorium, the bride on the arm of her father. The attendants were: Ushers, Ernest E. Wooden, Milton J. Brooks, Milton S. Gwynn, and James H. Jones; the best man, N. Barton Benson, brother of the bridegroom; maid of honor, Miss Sara Sidwell, sister of the bride, and bridesmaids, Miss Margaret Benson and Mrs. James H. Jones, sister of the bride. The bridesmaids wore gowns of shades of orchid with hats to match and carried chrysanthemums. The bride's dress was exquisite of white satin tulle and duchess lace, with a long veil. She wore a coronet of orange blossoms and carried bride's roses. The impressive ring ceremony was used.

A reception was held at the home of the parents on Doyle avenue, to the immediate families. After the ceremony the bridal couple left amid a shower of confetti and rice on a wedding trip to Florida going from Baltimore by steamship. The bride's going-away gown was of black prince pin-point trimmed in civet cat fur and she wore a black hat. They will be at home after December 1, at 807 Beaumont avenue, Govans, Md.

The bride is a graduate of 1919 class Western Maryland College and popular with the younger set. The bridegroom is a graduate of Baltimore college of Commerce and Maryland University Law School. The gifts were many and beautiful.

Saturday last Miss Madeline Schue daughter of Mr. and Mrs. John Schue, of Union Bridge, this county, and Willard Barnes, son of Mr. and Mrs. Oden Barnes of New Windsor, this county, surprised their friends by getting married in Baltimore.
