MANCHESTER

May 28th was exhibition day at the schools with invitations to patrons and friends to visit them. Things were nicely arranged in the different rooms and of which the teachers were justly proud. The faculty was Prof. and Mrs. Edwards, Miss Baker, Miss Manahan, Miss Everhart, Mr. Cruthers; in the elementary Mr. Kerr, Miss Shower, Miss Davis, Mrs. Wink, Miss LaMotte. It being a special holiday the scholars made good use of it on the play ground. At eleven they were called to their rooms and formed in line and the march taken to the cemetery to the grave of Captain Samuel Deweeds and decorated it. Although it was many years ago yet we remember well his funeral; it was on a Sunday and the cemetery was filled with people. Captain Jacob Shower had it in charge and after the ceremony, part of the company shot in the grave and another part of the company shot over it. During the whole ceremony we were seated upon the shoulder of an uncle. Captain Jacob Shower at that time had a fine company of soldiers. After the strewing of the flowers the line of march was taken up to the grave of Corporal Paul Frankforter in the new cemetery which was also decorated. Afterwards they marched to the school ground where they were dismissed for dinner. It was disappointing to have such a small registry, for it certainly was interesting to see the year's work of the pupils, things made and done by the boys and girls in the different departments. The work in the Manuel training department is of interest; tables, fireless cookers; model bed rooms, model kitchens, and things of cooking in every line.

After spending the night comfortably and enjoying a fine breakfast they wended their way to the Shenandoah Caverns with fine views all around that section. The next camp was laid on top of a mountain called Observatory Hill, near Charlottsville, that was pretty breezy; but after a good breakfast we struck camp and left for home through Washington with many notes of the country and incidents in our first venture.

The elder Yingling received severe injuries about his head, and is now under the care of Dr. Foutz, Westminster. The truck was taken back to Westminster, under its own power.
