Pretty Things that are Made at Home

WANT to turn rainy, blustery, stay-in-the-house days, also long winter evenings into hours of joy for the children of the household? Easiest thing in the world to do, if you start them carving toys out of soap, beautifying them with sealing wax paint. The work is not only fascinating but instructive as well. Grown-ups themselves will welcome an excuse to show the "kiddies" how, for it's lots of fun making these toys.

In this brief article one cannot go into minute detail but "a word to the wise is sufficient." The materials needed are simple—just an oblong bar or more of white soap that floats, a penknife or a paring knife, and sealing wax of various bright colors, also white or transparent amber.

To prepare the sealing wax paint, break it into small pieces, place each color in a separate little screw-top jar and cover the wax scantily with denatured alcohol. Put the covers on the jars and allow to stand until the sealing wax dissolves, which is usually about twenty-four hours.

In the meantime draw on paper an elephant or a duck. The outline pattern in the picture is half size. Cut this out and stick it on the top surface of the bar of soap so it cannot slip. Then cut away the soap from around the pattern. In other words carve out the toy as if sculpturing.

Now comes the fun of coloring with the sealing wax paint. Any child's animal picture book is good to refer to for ideas for painting.

The figures of the little girl and the kitty with the guitar which you see are photographs of real pictures, such as one can cut out of gay printed crepe tissue paper. These can be used the same as patterns. After the carving out of the figure, it can be gone over with sealing wax paint.

Not only do these carved figures make pretty toys, but as ornamental figures for the mantel or the cabinet they furnish a gay note of color.

If these carved figures are to be used as ornaments, tiny colored jewels can be pressed in for eyes, doing so while the sealing-wax paint is still moist. The gorgeously painted rug thrown over the elephant as pictured here could be enriched with jewel incrustations.
