Selection Of Seed Corn Is Held Important

Factors In Selection Cited By Extension Service Specialist

In making plans for the coming corn crop too much emphasis cannot be placed on the importance of selecting healthy, disease resistant seed corn for planting purposes, according to F. W. Oldenburg, agronomist for the University of Maryland Extension Service. He says that a little extra time spent in the careful selection of seed at this time may mean the differnece between a poor and a profitable crop of corn. Good seed corn, in addition to aiding in the production of higher yields, also produces more vigorous seedlings, which are better able to withstand unfavorable weather conditions that may arise at planting time

There are four important steps in the selection of seed corn, according to Mr. Oldenburg, inspection of the ears, kernels and cobs and testing for germination.

For those who must obtain their seed corn from the crib at this season of the year it is important to select ears which are heavy for their size, typical of the variety, and which are free from mold or discoloration. The ears should be bright and glossy in appearance and have butts which have broken off clean without shreds or stringiness.

The grains should be plump, hard, well shaped, smooth and glistening. At least two grains from each ear should be opened with a sharp pointed knife to ascertain the condition of the germ. A healthy germ is plump, creamy white waxy in texture and cuts firmly.

Cobs should also be inspected and no ear of corn having a badly discolored cob should be used. Cobs showing discoloration, especially around the pith, indicate disease.

A final step to learn how good a selection of corn has been made is to make a germination test. If more than 95 percent of the seed produces vigorous sprouts the seed is safe for planting.

Study Of Tomato Varieties Is Urged By State

Canning Specialist Asks Study Before Planting Time Arrives

At this time of the year when plans are being made for the coming tomato season it is well to consider the merits of the various varieties of tomatoes, especially with reference to some of the newer ones which may or may not be adapted to Maryland conditions, according to Herman A. Hunter, canning crops specialist for the University of Maryland Extension Service.

While Marglobe and Greater Baltimore have been found well adapted for the State as a whole, there are a number of other tomato varieties which have given highly successful results in certain localities in Maryland. Among these are the Rutgers, Brown's Special, Pritchard, and White's Number Four. Penn State, Market Champion and Stone have not succeeded so well in this state.

Brown's Special has given excellent results thus far in the canning area of the mid-Eastern Shore, and Pritchard also has been gaining favor in the State during the last two or three years, according to Mr. Hunter. White's Number Four has only recently been developed by Thomas H. White of the University Experiment Station and in some communities is used in preference to Marglobe. It is a mid-season variety of excellent type and quality and small quantities of the seed are available free of charge from the University. Rutgers would seem to be a promising new variety for both canning and, in some instances, local fresh market, but further tests will have to be run before general recommendations can be made for this state, it is pointed out.

The new Penn State might be used for a very early market in the western part of Maryland but it does not seem promising under local conditions. In like manner, Market Champion and Stone have been among the lowest producers in the State.

As long as the supply lasts, anyone desiring a small quantity of the seed of White's Number Four should write Mr. Hunter at College Park.

Birthday greetings to Ted Jewett who was at one time announcer for the Voice of Experience and who is now playing parts on the March of Time program. Ted, by the way, was born in Japan and made his CBS debut in November, 1934.

Movie stars seem to react very differently in front of the mike than they do before the camera. For instance Janet Gaynor in her recent start over the air for the first time near died from fright until the show began.

Gary Cooper is always late for rehearsals. Ronald Coleman has the jitters, while Freddie Bartholomew, who is only nine years old, is the most self-possessed of them all. Spencer Tracy, Ruth Chatterton and Patsy Kelly chew gum not only during rehearsal but also through the whole broadcast.

The other day John Gambling opened his early morning broadcast with a remark that he and his assistants had just walked up 25 flights of stairs because the elevator strike had even effected station WOR lifts. In less than five minutes Gambling received a phone call from the union saying that it wasn't so. He had meant it as a joke but the union couldn't see it that way. Probably J. G. felt the program needed a little uplifting.

Popular Jack Benny, a long time ago was wont to go under the name of Ben Benny. He changed his first name to Jack because of a possible confusion with Ben Bernie . . . Maybe if he had waited long enough, Bernie would have been the one to change.

The next time you listen on the radio and hear your old friend Rubinoff play his violin, it might add interest to know that his fiddle is worth a cool $100,000 and his bow a mere $1,500. If he decides to restring the bow it is another $1.50.

Some one took a Leap Year poll of the young gals in Phil Spitalny's programme (CBS Hour of Charm) as to what they required in the character of a prospective husband. They didn't want much, only he must be about 31 years old, six feet tall, an American weighing 175 pounds, a college graduate and a business man with a sense of humor earning $10,000 or more a year. If the writer could find some one with all those qualities, he would marry the goddess himself and who wouldn't?

There's been some argument as to whether Cheerio's birds are real or only a clever whistle. NBC points with pride to their canaries in chromium cages in the studio building, and say, "Here they are".

The March of Time reports that President Roosevelt is their headliner, having appeared in 72 episodes. Your old friend Chancellor Hitler was second with 44 points; while Mrs. F. D. R. tied with the late King George, Mahatma Gandhi, Mayor LaGuardia and Paul von Hindenburg.

Interest to Women Only. The Columbia network is now broadcasting in the mornings at 9:30 A. M. a series of women's programs that should have a large feminine following.

Here's a couple of items that might very easily be answered by the remark: "Is that so"? Bing Crosby has been on a diet and lost 15 lbs, and Major Bowes is writing his autobiography.

Jack Rubin was scared stiff by the flashlight of a London bobby's lamp (that's cop over here) at the age of six and couldn't talk for two years. Folks, who follow The ONeil's program, would never suspect that the locquacious Mr. Levy is none other than Mrs. Rubin's boy in long pants these many years.

There's no argument for insurance like the experience of a man who suffers a loss WITHOUT Insurance.
