WORMSEED PLANTS SERIOUSLY INJURED

The wormseed plant beds in the county have been more seriously injured than last week's reports indicated. Conservative estimates place the losses of plants at least 40%. Most of the remaining plants show considerable injury from the insect damage which was followed by a severe attack of a bacterial blight. There are some few beds, which were sprayed or dusted early, that show little injury.

Dr. R. A. Jehle, Plant Disease Specialist, from the University of Maryland was in the county Tuesday and Wednesday of this week and with County Agent Walrath inspected several beds. Close examination showed that the disease was not caused by a fungus but rather by some bacterial disease. This undoubtedly has been spread from plant to plant by the millions of small fleas which infested the plant beds and to some extent by the rains.

Some control of the damage can yet be secured by keeping the new growth of the young plants coated with some form of a copper-lime or Bordeaux spray or dust. Any safe method of fertilizing the plants to force the growth, such as blood meal, or diluted nitrate of soda (tablespoon to gallon of water) will help the plants to recover from the injury.

Extensive laboratory experimental work will be done by Dr. Jehle to determine the exact cause of the later bacterial injury, that the growers may be better informed for another year. This is the first season that serious plant bed injury has been reported.

Cooks the Food — Not the Cook

The flame of a Nesco Oil Cook Stove is right where you want it to be—close under the utensil. This clean blue flame spreads under the entire cooking surface of the utensil. This insures quick cooking.

You needn't poke up a big fire if you want some hot water—simply light one burner. When done, turn it out. No need to keep the kitchen hot all day.

There is no reason why you should be uncomfortable with an overheated kitchen. You won't be if you have a
