UP AND DOWN THE Eastern Shore

Pigeons of Peace

Elkton—Five homer pigeons sent by W. Sterling Evans to Washington last week in the nation-wide "Campaign for Peace" flew home with greetings and congratulations from the First Lady of the Land. Released by Dr. John W. Studebaker, U. S. Commissioner of Education, from the shadow of Washington's monument, a message in a container attached to one of the homer's legs which bore Mrs. Roosevelt's signature said in part: "We need the same interest and sacrifice for peace now as in the time of war."

Hodson Hall Concert

Chestertown—The Board of Visitors and Governors of Washington College have awarded contract for the erection of Hodson Hall to Thomas Hicks and Son, Baltimore, at a price of $43,819. The new building is in memory of the late Clarence Hodson whose widow donated $23,000 toward the cost of the structure.

10,000 Chicks Perish

Preston — With no water available when Easton and Preston firemen responded to a 4 a. m. alarm at the poultry farm of Harry M. Hollis, ten thousand baby chicks ready for market perished in the flames and poultry houses destroyed brought the total loss to $5,000.

Fishermen's First Haul

Ocean City—Commercial fishermen of Ocean City made the first large catch of the season last week when the firm of Elliott Brothers of which Mayor Elliott is a member made a haul of 110 barrels. Hardheads and croakers were in the first haul. Delayed spring made the first catch a week later than usual.

Erratic Economy

Elkton—In an effort to cut down on Cecil County election expenses Senator Harold E. Coburn had a bill passed in 1935 calling for two judges and two clerks to come on duty when the polls closed and count the votes. However, he overlooked striking out an old provision for four judges and two clerks to remain on duty for the county so a double force will remain on the job, costing the county $69 per hour additional.

Capt. Pyne Passes

Oxford—Capt. Robert Pyne, member of the crew of the famous Island Blossom when it made racing history a generation ago in the Chesapeake Bay regatta and a lifetime waterman, is dead at 61. He was stricken with paralysis while at the helm of his bugeye.

So He Married Her

Berlin—Lodged in the local jail and with all signs pointing to being held for the Grand Jury as the result of "breach-of-promise" proceedings instituted by Mrs. Lillie Susie Bennett, 31, William McKinley Viven sent for his financee, talked things over with her, had the Deputy Sheriff accompany them to Snow Hill for a license, and then married her. P. S. She dropped the case.

Button Makers Quit

Federalsburg — Seventy-five button makers and operators at the Excelsior Pearl Works plant staged a walk out last week in the absence of the manager, Samuel R. Davis, who was vacationing in Bermuda. Dissatisfaction over the wage scale was the cause, according to reports.

Cold Aids Strawberries

Marion Station—The long, cold winter worked its hardships in many ways but nature will make amends by increasing this year's strawberry crop, all signs indicate. There were no warm periods for the berries to bloom prematurely and thus fall prey to frosts and freezes so growers are looking for banner crops.

"Fishing Fair"

Preston — Formation of a "Fishing Fair" to bring the Chesapeake and its tributaries to the attention of disciples of Izaak Walton in metropolitan centers reached preliminary stages last week when Max Chambers, Maryland's No. 1 fisherman in 1935 who caught a 60 lb. drum in the Bay, called a meeting at his home here. Peter C. Chambliss, donor of the annual Fisherman's Luck Trophy sponsored by the Baltimore Sunpapers for the biggest catch of the year, was among those present.

Pocomoke Wants P. O.

Pocomoke City — Contending that Easton, Chestertown, Cambridge and Crisfield all have obtained Federal buildings and that nearby smaller towns such as Onancock, Va., and Seaford, Del., have been favored with appropriations for new postoffices, Senator Milton L. Veasey and leading business men of Worcester County have jumped Senators Radcliffe and Tydings for a new postoffice for Pocomoke City. Veasey said Worcester had been discriminated against.

Prolific Cow

Easton—Clinton McS. Henry, a farmer near here, claims he has an exceptional cow. Starting when fifteen months old the animal has produced a calf every ten months and ten days ago reached a new high with twins. This brought the grand total to eight calves, all lived, and Bossy will not be seven years old until Nov. 20.

Mules Bolt, Hurt Farmer

Hurlock—Believed to have become frightened by the noise of a roller to which they had been hooked, a pair of mules ran away, throwing Alphonso Dean into a tree and injuring him so severely that he was removed to Cambridge Hospital.

Board Comes Across

Princess Anne—Somerset's Board of County Commissioners, who were subjected to considerable criticism when they declined to chip in $96 to obtain a State and Federal allotment of $2,500 for aid to dependent children, changed their minds, granted the money. At the same time they laid off six members of the Welfare Board's field and office staff to become effective May 1, claiming reduction of relief cases made it necessary.

Skipjack on View

Denton—The Rev. John White, rector of Christ P. E. Church whose hobby is modelling craft peculiar to the Chesapeake, will place a skipjack on exhibition at Franklin Institute, Philadelphia. The minister has a fleet of Bay boats built to scale.

Little Theatre's Ghost Train Proves Mildly Entertaining

Despite heroic efforts, excellent stage sets and makeup, and sound and lighting effects worthy of the professional stage, the mystery-comedy "Ghost Train" presented at the Little Theatre by the Queen Anne's Players on Thursday and Friday evenings proved only mildly entertaining.

A full house greeted the opening performance. The Friday crowd was disappointingly small. The vacant chairs may have drained the pep out of the Players at the Friday show which this reviewer witnessed, but even then there was evidence of inept and unconvincing work.

In general, the players did not warm up to their parts. They walked through too many lines, situations and entrances that clamored for acting. Shades of characters were not worked out and the audience had to trust to their own imaginations to get the meat out of the play.

The redeeming features of the "Ghost Train" were in the arrangements. Charles West, Jr., as usual furnished an artistic and realistic setting for the old Maine station.

The lightning, thunder, wind, rain and especially the representation of the train roaring through the station at midnight will be the remembered angle of the play. These effects worked out by Richard Pitkin and operated by William Riggs were as natural as life.

The makeup of characters by Leonard Binebrink was likewise the last word in Little Theatre standards.

The "Ghost Train" concerns itself with a group of Main dope smugglers who used a local tradition of a train wreck as cover for opium, heroin and rum-running until unmasked by a cleverly disguised Scotland Yard detective.

J. Hall Barton was easily the star performer. Cast as Teddy Deakin, Mr. Barton rated top-hole as a barmy Englishman who was a load of comedy for the audience but a pain in the neck with his fellow passengers because of the jokes he could not finish and the asinine tricks he pulled as a blind for his real work as a Scotland Yard operative. He was entirely at ease in his part and was smooth and convincing in his interpretation.

Eleanor Dudley as Miss Bourne, a frustrated spinster, turned in another of her excellent comedy roles. Much of the humor of the play went out when she was tucked away on a shelf from the middle of the second act until the final curtain after a hilarious bout with a slug of brandy.

Harry O. Booker as Saul Hodgkin, station master and tool of the crooks, laid the basis of the play with an earnest narration of the "Ghost Train" tradition.

Other members of the cast were Miss Sara Catherine Roe, Miss Lucille Lutz, Miss Dolly Price, Richard Pitkin, Ray Tabler, Dudley Benton, Frank Willis, and Bill Riggs.

The players were cast and coached by Mrs. Edna M. Harris, director of the Little Theatre.

Coffee was served after each performance in connection with the rounding out of a year by the Players. Miss Helen West of the hospitality committee was hostess.
