FARM POULTRY

WATCH MARKETING EGGS AND POULTRY

"Poultry production is running wild without chart or compass, stimulated by past profits, by a tendency to shift from other nonpayment branches of agriculture to poultry raising, and by optimistic statements of those who sell supplies to poultrymen."

This is a statement of Prof. James E. Rice, head of the poultry department of the New York State College of Agriculture at Ithaca, N. Y., commenting on trends in the poultry industry.

Recent figures showing the enrollment in the correspondence courses in poultry husbandry offered by the college, bear out this statement.

A WESTMINSTER BOY'S "ADVENTURES IN ARABIA"

In announcing the publication of William B. Seabrook's "Adventures In Arabia," Harcourt, Brace & Co., the publishers, say: "To the great company of Doughty and Lawrence you may add Seabrook. His book is literature of a high order. As detailed as a Persian miniature, as dramatic as a novel, it still has the courage to describe frankly the customs of the peoples of the desert. Mr. Seabrook is an American who went to Arabia for no moral, political or humanitarian reason but solely for the joy and love of it. He became a Moslem, rode and fought in native costume with sheiks of great tribes, and lived among the people of whom he writes."

Mr. Seabrook was born in Westminster, the son of Mr. and Mrs. William L. Seabrook. His maternal grandfather was the late David A. Buehler, of Gettysburg, Pa., lawyer and editor, and for many years presi-

I began to plan and get ready, for she was going too." And then the dream came true.

They embarked on their great adventure, and "Adventures in Arabia" is the wonder story of their thrillin; experiences in the Mountain of the Druses, among the Devil Worshippers, the Whirling Dervishes, and dwelling in the black tents of the Bedouins. Although Mr. Seabrook's father received advance copies of the book, his son the author, modestly requested him to have no mention made of it locally, where his friends would be naturally favorably prejudiced, until after the book reviewers of the great metropolitan press had recorded their impressions.

Any one who has the opportunity to read the book will agree with the reviewers that it is "an unusual book of adventures that are different." For one seeking information the book is a treasure house; the lover of exciting stories of adventure or of love will find them here; and whoever begins to read will not be settled
