THE GREAT HAGERSTOWN FAIR

Hagerstown, Md., Oct. 7.—Grey hound races, the sport now sweeping the south, will be just another feature of the 1927 Greater Hagerstown Fair, scheduled for October 11, 12, 13 and 14, it was announced here today following a conference between fair officials and a group of hound owners.

The races have proved big drawing cards in different sections of the country but particularly throughout the south. The hounds chase an electric rabbit, which is kept a few jumps ahead of them. The local race track can be easily adapted to the staging of a meet.

New and unusual features are being entered daily in this year's exhibition and prospects for the greatest fair in the history of the association were never so bright, directors say. Every department is expected to overflow judging from the many entries so far received. The machinery exhibit will be exceptionally interesting as it will contain the biggest array of mechanical contrivances, implements, etc. ever assembled at any eastern fair.

The thousands of dollars awarded annually in poultry prizes are again attracting exhibitors from nearly every state in the country. Prominent among them will be Walter Johnson, famous pitcher for the Washington Senators and Clyde Barnhart the heavy-hitting outfielder of the Pittsburg Pirates. Johnson will be here on Tuesday, October 11, the opening day of the fair.

She Looked Like a Million

By CORONA REMINGTON

(Copyright.)

EVELYN ACTON glanced quickly around to see whether any of the waiters were watching, then deftly removed two rolls from her gay little red-leather handbag and put them on the table beside her cup of steaming coffee. It gave her a feeling of prosperity to breakfast with the successful business men and women of the town.

This morning, however, she was rather depressed; for three solid days she had been hunting a position without success and her funds were now reduced to small change. She looked wistfully at a juicy piece of fried ham that a patron had hastily left on his plate at the next table and crinkled her little nose as its fragrance came invitingly to her. It seemed to tease her and make the dry rolls drier in her mouth. Then after she had finished she did a strange thing. As she rose from the table she opened her purse, took out a pencil and piece of paper, then sat down at the ham table. As she scribbled aimless words she noticed that there was a clean spoon beside the plate and the knife had only been used for cutting so she was not afraid of it—only a matter of seconds now and she would be nonchalantly placing bits of the tender meat in her mouth, but—sensing that someone was at her elbow she looked up into the implacable face of a waiter.

"Pardon, madam, permit me to remove this and you will have more room to write."

The ham was whisked away and the clean spoon and the knife that had only been used for cutting, but quick on the heels of disappointment came a sense of escape; if that waiter had not come at that moment he would have seen her eating the other patron's breakfast.

Evelyn rose, adjusted her little black hat, gave a pat to her dress and walked out.

"Making your way in a big city isn't so bad," she reflected, "until you lose your position, and then—" poignant homesickness rushed over her as she thought of the little home town she had left and of Jack Dalton who had wanted to marry her and whom she had so flatly refused.

"All right," he had said with a shrug. "When you get through with your career you can come to me."

That was four years ago. With a toss of impatience she pulled herself together and walked swiftly along.

"If you want to impress people," she soliloquized, "you have to hold your head up when you wear a five-dollar dress marked down from $12.98 (on the tag) and want it to look like a $75 French room creation." So she walked jauntily down the street, her disappointed stomach already beginning to scream for the ham it didn't get. That was one deceiving thing about a coffee and rolls breakfast; it had a way of playing hide and seek, it was there and then suddenly it was gone.

"Now, let's see, where's that address?" she went on. "Yes, 746 Empire building. The Wearever Tire company. They said to call at ten o'clock. It's three blocks down and two across. I'll just about get there on time. Wonder how many others they wrote to call, too. But my letter was a good one if I do say it—maybe they'll take me."

And the big building swallowed her up. She left the elevator at the sev-

AUTUMN'S VELVET FROCKS STRESS ELEGANCE OF THE DAYTIME MODE

ELEGANCE of the mode, elegance of the mode; the theme is being repeated over and over again in fashion's realm. One has only to see the sumptuous velvet and satin frocks in the autumn collection, some with lavish metal embellishment, to sense the significance of this "elegance of the mode" movement.

The particular "new" thing about all this elaboration and ornateness is that it is no respecter of the arbitrary line once drawn between what is to be restricted to evening and what is "good form" for daytime wear. Gold and silver now gleam on daylight frocks as confidently as on formal evening gowns. The newest innovation is the plaited skirt of metal cloth or, if one prefers, a plaited velvet skirt topped with a blouse of metal cloth.

There is very close competition between velvet and satin just now. Satin is not what it used to be, nor is velvet. They are infinitely handsomer this season than ever before. There is no costume so lovely or withal so generally wearable for all dressy occasions as the velvet or satin frocks of present-day inspiration.

So supple is the new transparent velvet, it shirrs and drapes and gathers like chiffon. The same may be said of the new satins; their suppleness yields to every intricate manipulation. Some of the most captivating velvet or satin daytime dresses have not an inch of any but self-trimming on them, and, scalloped, tiered, ruffled, tucked, plaited and draped as they are, they are taking the fashionable world by storm.

Contrasting the frock which "unadorned is adorned most," are the velvet and satin gowns for afternoon wear, which are enhanced with a touch of gold, and of which the model in the picture is a charming exponent. It is fashioned of brown velvet, with gold lace trimming. A hat of gold thread, embroidered in colors, is worn with this dress.

Yokes, vestees and cascades formed of cream lace or exquisite real lace, play their part in enhancing the velvet dress this season. Deep and fanciful lace cuffs are especially cited in the new modes.

Transparent black, navy, wine or beige velvet is also often made up with deep yokes extending under the arm, which are fashioned of flesh color or pale pink georgette. Often the georgette is greatly elaborated with embroidery or beads, sequins or spangles.
