LETTER FROM A MISSIONARY

comfortable for our feet. Over here, all clothing is fastened on the right side; only the dead have their kimonas fastened on the left side.

Japanese people as a rule are not very tall. Helene, the tallest of our four, says she feels like a giant, while I, for the first time in my life, feel perfectly comfortable. I didn't suppose that anyone could be much shorter than I, and not look like a freak, but here the freaks are the ones who are much taller than I. The babies are the dearest little things. When I see them, I am more eager than ever to start my kindergarten.

The first night we were here, we went out for a walk. We saw, and we were seen. We were looking at the odd costumes worn by the two men in front of us, when I turned around and saw the two girls laughing at the odd costumes worn by the four American girls infront of them. Oh, "to see our selves as others see us."

We had an earthquake today. We felt the house shaking, but it was all over in a minute. There was one last night, too, but we were all so busy sleeping we didn't feel it. It is just an ordinary event.

Until you hear further please continue to send my mail to the same address and write often. Mail here is a welcome event, especially when it is from home. Whenever a boat comes in from America, all the missionaries say, "I wonder if that boat is bringing any mail for me."

Love to you all and write,

Sympathy is expressed for the African dodger at the county fair, but there are many white people also who could serve in that capacity without injury to their heads.
