DAIRY FACTS

PREPARING DAIRY FOR COLD WINTER

"The first thing to do in preparing for winter," says Dr. C. H. Eckles, chief of the dairy division of the University of Minnesota, "is to go over your feed situation. If you have silage on hand and legume hay in the barn it will be easy to fix up a suitable grain mixture. If you have corn and oats or barley you will not need to patronize the feed store unless you have some heavy milking cows to feed. If your cows are heavy milkers some concentrate high in protein is needed to balance the grain ration, and the amount needed for the winter should be purchased. It never pays to half feed live stock of any kind.

"Do not wait too long in the fall before beginning to house the cows at night and even during the day whenever the weather is bad. I believe that cows suffer more from cold on the average in November than during any other month. The owner likes to keep them out as long as possible to save labor and possibly in some states with the idea of saving feed. A cow compelled to stand outdoors in a cold raw wind or a cold rain is in no condition to make a profit. She will not hold up in milk like in May or June because she is uncomfortable.

"Housing fattening animals and dairy cows is quite a different proposition. The fat animal is well protected from the cold and does not mind it. The cow in milk is not protected by a layer of fat. She is giving off fat in place of putting it on. A barbed-wire fence is mighty poor shelter for a dairy cow either day or night during the winter."

Avoid Breeding Heifer Before Two Years Old

Experienced dairymen who have been breeding dairy cattle for some time appreciate the damage that is done to heifers if they are bred too young. Premature breeding usually results in undersized animals which have a reduced capacity for milk production. Continued breeding at an early age tends to weaken the vitality and vigor of the herd.

The larger breeds of dairy cattle, like the larger breeds of chickens, require more time to mature than the smaller breeds. This means that Holsteins must be allowed more time to grow than Jerseys. Even the smaller breeds should not be allowed to produce calves before they are two years old if they are to give the best results.

It is generally agreed that Holsteins should be from nineteen to twenty-one months old when bred; Ayrshires should be from eighteen to twenty-months; Guernseys from seventeen to nineteen months, and Jerseys from fifteen to seventeen months. This means that the heifers must not be allowed to run with the herd bull, for they will often come in heat many months before this age is reached.

Clean Stables Greatest Factor Against Disease

The greatest factor in the eradication of bovine tuberculosis is declared to be proper cleanliness of dairy barns. It is significant that one of the greatest troubles experienced in British Columbia during the testing for the establishment of a T. B. free area was to get farmers to properly clean up.

"Fortunately," says the Dairy Farmer, "our friend the sun has prodigious curative powers, and will help to kill off the germs of tuberculosis wherever he gets a chance to do so."

The farmers who are advocating open-air conditions for dairy cows have strong supporters in their claim that it is often the expensive coddled animal which develops T. B. and that the disease is comparatively unknown among cattle which run out practically all the time.

To properly keep clean a cow barn is so difficult that it is rarely done, but the development of disease may be prevented by allowing the animals to exercise in the open rather than by coddling them in tight barns which. In fact, have been proved to be among the worst factors in the spread of T. B. among cows.

Ventilating Barn

When building a new barn or remodeling an old one, many factors and problems should be given the very closest consideration. The location of the barn with reference to drainage and its relation to other buildings cannot be given too much attention. The internal arrangement of the barn and the fixtures that are to be used should be designed to save labor. An abundance of light should be provided because sunlight is a very important factor.

Watch Young Calf

Too often dry pastures, flies and especially insufficient grain and water cause scrawny-looking calves that never develop into average-size cows. The calf should be eating some grain from the time it is three weeks old and at weaning time this should be slightly increased, especially if the pasture is short. If no pasture is available a little alfalfa hay will help materially. With good pasture, grain is not necessary more than two weeks after weaning.

"THE CIRCUS PRINCESS"

"The Circus Princess," considered the Messrs. Shubert's most massive musical offering, begins a week's engagement at the Auditorium Theatre, Baltimore, Md., Monday night, December 5, with matinees on Wednesday and Saturday.

This musical spectacle recently finished a seven months run at the New York Winter Garden. The same cast and production that played New York will be seen here.

"The Circus Princess" is still an outstanding European success, now playing its fifth consecutive year in Vienna. It is said to be the costliest, most elaborate and stupendous production ever attempted by the Shuberts.

The cast is headed by Guy Robertson, last seen here in "Rose Marie" and "The Song of the Flame," William Danforth, Desiree Tabor, Gloria Foy, of the flying feet, "Poodles" Hanneford and his family, George Bickel, Ted Doner, Florence Morrison, James C. Morton and the Eight Liebling Singers. Besides, there are the exquisite Winter Garden show girls, the Allan K. Foster Mirror Girls and some thirty Viennese choristers to give it all a foreign flavor. Alltold, the musical spectacle employs one hundred and fifty people.

The music was composed by Emmerich Kalman, responsible for the lilting melodies of "Countess Maritza" and "Sari." The score of "The Circus Princess" is said to be his best in that he has happily caught the mood of the Russian and Viennese music in its most charming tempos.

Some people fear uprisings on the part of revolutionists, but there appears more danger of downsittings on the part of idle and indolent folks.

The people do not wear out as much footwear as they did, but they are wearing out a lot more automobile cushions.

The people who used to have to ride horseback to shake up their sluggish insides, now avoid all that while motoring over the rough roads.

Instead of climbing the ladder as formerly, millions of young men are looking for a chance to be hoisted by the elevator.

No enthusiasm is manifested by the aviators, for the idea that the people should keep their feet on the ground.
